Correspondence of the St. Louis Intelligencer.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 31, 1850.

Some time is requisite after arrival here, to form correct opinions in reference to this country. The first impression on seeing this city, with its wharfs, planked streets, sewers, buildings, and the fleet of fine ships crowding the harbor, calling to mind that none of all these were to be seen a few months since—must be, that here is now exhibited the truly "magic power of gold" in a manner such as it has never been at any time in the world's history.

There are miles of wharfs built on piles extending out into the bay, and nearly all the business streets are planked, and have large sewers sufficient to carry off all the water. Very many substantial brick and stone buildings have been put up the past season, and other buildings, more than sufficient for present wants of population, so much so that on many of them, "to let" hangs out from week to week. One year since, goods were exposed to the storms for weeks, because there were no houses to store them. Thousands who had the means to pay for comfortable quarters, were compelled to live in tents—now, there are accommodations for all, and much room to spare. This city is very finely situated for building. On the hills, the views across, as well as up and down the bay, are beautiful, exceedingly. Then the business part of the city lies between the high ground, so that from them the city and the fleet of vessels of all sizes and of every flag, presents another view, showing at a glance all the bustle, hurry and driving about, peculiar to San Francisco. This place being so close to the entrance of the bay, and having so much capital invested in city improvements, will probably maintain its position as the great city of the Pacific—yet had the first start been made some twenty miles up the bay, this place could never have successfully competed with that location. There the harbor is perfectly good—here, though sheltered from the sea, there is no protection from storms coming down the bay, or rather from south east,—Several vessels have been lost this winter from this cause.

For healthy location, any part of the Bay, and for considerable distance from it inland, is decidedly good. The idea prevailing generally in the old States, that gold is the only resource of California, is all wrong, as well as that which supposes no agriculture possible except by irrigation. Many turned their attention to farming last season; their success was such as to induce many more to turn farmers this season. As good crops of wheat, barley and oats, with potatoes, and almost all other vegetables, were raised here last year without irrigation, as could be possible any where. Thousands of tons of excellent hay were made from the natural meadows. Some few old Californians have for years cultivated the vine. The grapes were equal, if not superior, to any that I have ever seen, and the yield enormous. It is a question with many, whether it would not be well for the country should the gold give out very soon, and create in this way a necessity for developing the commercial and agricultural resources of the country. But the gold will not, in all probability, give out for years—and while those who have an iron constitution, industrious habits, well settled, correct and moral principles, will succeed well—thousands will sacrifice health and everything else of value to themselves, and in many cases, like itself, in vain efforts to secure a fortune, or as it is said here, "make their pile." Very much gold is obtained now, and should rains (of which, however, there has been but little) prevail, so that the dirt dug at the Dry Diggings can be washed to advantage, the amount will be enormous.

Business now is very dull; almost everything that was ever raised or made any where, is crowded in here, and markets are overstocked and glutted. Merchants look forward to a good spring business, notwithstanding.

The Legislature is about to meet. The Whigs claim a majority on joint ballot, and expect to send a good Whig to the U. S. Senate, but it may be that politicians may prove here as in a similar state of parties in Louisiana, "mighty uncertain;" and the minority now here, and then there, secure the Senator. Fremont is here, and doing all in his power to secure a re-election, but with the exception of a few other holders of large Spanish claims, he "goes it alone," and his friends have no expectation that he can succeed. Yours, D. M. F.

RIGHT TO THE POINT.—Almost any one can be courteous in a neighbor's house. If anything goes wrong, or is out of time, or is disagreeable, there it is made the best of, not the worst; even efforts are made to excuse it, and to show it is not felt; or if felt, it is attributable to accident, not to design; and this is not only easy but natural, in the house of a friend. I will not, therefore, believe that which is so natural in the house of another is impossible at home, but maintain, without fear, that all the courtesies of social life may be upheld in domestic societies. A husband, as willing to be pleased at home, and as anxious to please as in a neighbor's house, and a wife as intent on making things as comfortable every day to her family, as on set days to her guests, could not fail to make their own home happy.

Whatever you think proper to grant a child, let it be granted at the first word, without entreaty or prayer; and, above all, without making any conditions. Grant with pleasure, refuse with reluctance, but let your refusal be irrevocable; let not importunity shake your resolution, let the particle no, when pronounced, be like a wall of brass, which a child, after he has tried it half-a-dozen times, shall never more endeavor to shake.

Remember the Soldier.

BY J. H. STEWART, OF PLEASANT GROVE.

Remember the Soldier—the true faithful Soldier!
Who went, at the word of the Lord, to the west,
To save trav'ling Israel, on the wide spreading prairie,
And to purchase a place for himself with the blest.
To march across desert, and plain, and high mountain;
Obeying the call of his country, and God;
Marching hard through the day, helping roll on the wagons,
And sleeping at night on the cold prairie sod.

Remember the Soldier—the time beaten Soldier!
Whose face bears the marks of full sixty or more;
Whose hair is besprinkled with snow, and with honor,
And who, though once wealthy, now ranks with the poor,
Who, when he was called, took his musket and knapsack,
And marched far away, at the beat of the drum,
To meet with his foes, and to fight in the battles,
And to face ev'ry danger which to him might come

Remember the Soldier—the health broken Soldier,
Who toil'd with his comrades, o'er mountain and plain;
Who waded through waters, and swam over rivers,
Which brought on diseases, and sickness, and pain.
Who now is afflicted in body and spirit;
Whose lungs are consumptive, and wasting away;
Who struggles with poverty, pain, and distresses,
And almost despairs of relief, in this day.

Remember the Soldier—the misguied Soldier,
Who, since his return to family, and friends,
Has, by his basements, been led into vices,
Which will prove his ruin, if held to the end.
Point out the result of the course he is taking,
Pray God that his Spirit may guide him aright;
That he may be led in the way of his duty,
And sav'd in the Kingdom of Peace and of Light.

Remember the Soldier's poor widow, and orphans,
Who moura for the loss of their father and head;
Who fell by disease, or was murdered by Indians,
And now has a name and a place with the dead.
Remember those widows, and orphans, and bless them;
Their prayers to the God of all truth do ascend;
Remember, dear friend, this remember, and let them,
In you, and myself, find a father and friend.

Good Advice to Young Women.

Trust not uncertain riches, but prepare yourselves for every emergency of life. Learn to work and not be dependant on servants to make your bread, sweep your floors, and darn your stockings. Above all, do not esteem too lightly those honorable young men, who sustain themselves and their aged parents by the work of their own hands, while you caress and receive into your company, those lazy, idle popinjays, who never lift a finger to help themselves as long as they can keep body and soul together, and get funds to live in fashion. If you are wise, you will look at this subject as we do, and when you are old enough to become wives, you will prefer an honest mechanic with not one cent to commence life, to the fashionable loafer with a capital of ten thousand dollars. Whenever we hear remarked "such a lady has married a fortune," we tremble for her future prosperity. Riches left to children by wealthy parents turn out to be a curse instead of a blessing. Young women, remember this, and instead of sounding the purse of your lovers, and examining the cut of their coats, look into their habits and their hearts, mark if they have trades, and can depend upon themselves—see that they have minds which will look above a butterfly existence. Talk not of the beautiful white skin, and the soft delicate hand, and the splendid form, and the fine appearance of the young gentlemen.

Rising in the World.

You should bear constantly in mind that nine-tenths of us are, from the very nature and necessities of the world, born to gain our livelihood by the sweat of the brow. What reason have we then, to presume that our children are not to do the same? If they be, as now and then one will be endowed with extraordinary powers of mind, those extraordinary powers may have an opportunity of developing themselves; and if they never have that opportunity, the harm is not very great to us, or to them. Nor does it hence follow that the descendents of laborers are always to be laborers. The path upward is steep and long, to be sure. Industry, care, skill, excellence, in the parent, lay the foundation of a rise, and by and by, the descendents of the present laborer become gentlemen. This is the natural progress. It is by attempting to reach the top at a single leap, that so much misery is produced in the world. Society may aid in making the laborer's virtuous and happy, by bringing children up to labor with steadiness, with care, and with skill; to show them how to do as many useful things as possible; to do them all in the best manner; to set them an example in industry, sobriety, cleanliness and neatness; to make all these habitual to them so that they shall never be liable to fall into the contrary, to let them always see a good living proceeding from labor, and thus to remove the temptation to get at the goods of others by violent or fraudulent means, and to keep from their minds all inducements to hypocrisy and deceit.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON MAILS.—Mails for California and Oregon are made up at the New Orleans Post Office on the 12th and 17th of each month, at 6 P. M. AUSTRIA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Chevalier J. G. Hulsemann to Secretary of State.

[Translated.] AUSTRIAN LEGATION, WASHINGTON, Sept. 30, 1850.

The undersigned, Charge d' Affairs of his Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, has been instructed to make the following communication to the Secretary of State.

As soon as the Imperial Government became aware of the fact that the United States agent had been dispatched to Vienna, with orders to watch for a favorable moment to recognize the Hungarian Republic, and to conclude a treaty of commerce with the same, the undersigned was directed to address some confidential but pressing representations to the Cabinet of Washington against that proceeding which is so much at variance with those principles of international law, so scrupulously adheard to by Austria at all times and under all circumstances, towards the United States. In fact with the principles of non-intervention, so formally announced by the United States as the basis of American policy, and which had just been sanctioned with so much solemnity by the President in his inaugural address of March 5th, 1849? Was it in return for the friendship and confidence which Austria had never ceased to manifest towards them, that the United States became so impatient for the downfall of the Austrian Monarchy, and even sought to accelerate that event by the utterance of their wishes to that effect? Those who did not hesitate to assume the responsibility of sending Mr. Dudley Mann on such an errand, should, independent of propriety, have bourne in mind that they were exposing their emissary to be treated as a spy. It is to be regretted that the American Government was not better informed as to the actual resources of Austria, and her historical perseverance in defending her just rights. A knowledge of those resources would have led to the conclusion that a contest of a few months' duration could neither have exhausted the energies of that power, nor turned aside its purpose to put down the insurrection. Austria has struggled against the French revolution for twenty-five years, the courage and perseverance which she exhibited in that memorable contest have been appreciated by the whole world.

To the urgent representations of the undersigned, Mr. Clayton answered that Mr. Mann's mission had no other object in view than to obtain reliable information as to the true state of affairs in Hungary, by personal observation. This explanation can hardly be admitted, for it says very little as to the cause of the anxiety which was felt to ascertain the chances of the revolutionists. Unfortunately, the language in which Mr. Mann's instruction were drawn, gives us a very correct idea of their scope. This language was offensive to the Imperial Cabinet, for it designated the Austrian Government as an Iron rule, and represents the rebel chief Kossuth as an illustrious man; while improper expressions are introduced in regard to Russia, the intimate and faithful ally of Austria. Notwithstanding these hostile demonstrations, the Imperial Cabinet has deemed it proper to preserve a conciliatory deportment, making ample allowance for the ignorance of the Cabinet of Washington on the subject of Hungarian affairs, and its disposition to give credence to the mediacious rumors which are propagated by the American press. This extremely painful incident, therefore, might have been passed over; without any written evidence being left on our part, in the archieves of the United States, had not General Taylor thought proper to revive the whole subject by communicating to the Senate, in his message of the 18th of last March, the instructions with which Mr. Mann had been furnished on the occasion of his mission to Vienna. The publicity which has been given to that document has placed the Imperial Government under the necessity of entering a formal protest through its official representative, against the proceedings of the American Government, lest that Government should construe our silence into approbation or toleration even, of the principles which appear to have guided its action and the means it has adopted.

In view of all these circumstances, the undersigned has been instructed to declare that the Imperial Government totally disapproves, and will always continue to disapprove of those proceedings, so offensive to the laws of propriety; and that it protests against all interference in the internal affairs of its Government. Having thus fulfilled his duty, the undersigned considers it a fortunate circumstance that he has it in his power to assure the Secretary of State that the Imperial Government is disposed to cultivate relations of friendship and good understanding with the United States, relations which have been momentarily weakened, but which could not again be seriously disturbed without placing the cardinal interests of the two countries in jeopardy.

The instructions for addressing this communication to Mr. Clayton reached Washington at the time of General Taylor's death. In compliance with the requisitions of propriety, the undersigned deemed it his duty to defer the task until the new administration had been completely organized; a delay which he now rejoices at, as it has given him the opportunity of ascertaining from the new President himself, on the occasion of the reception of the diplomatic corps, that the fundamental policy of the United States so frequently proclaimed, would guide the relations of the American Government with the other Powers. Even if the Government of the United States were to think it proper to take an indirect part in the political movements of Europe, American policy would be exposed to acts of retaliation, and to certain inconveniences, which could not fail to effect the commerce and the industry of the two hemispheres. All countries are obliged, at some period or other, to struggle against internal difficulties; all forms of government are exposed to such disagreeable episodes; the United States have had some experience in this very recently. Civil war is a possible occurrence everywhere, and the encouragement which is given to the spirit of insurrection and of disorder, most frequently falls back upon those who seek to aid it in its developments, in spite of justice and wise policy.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to the Secretary of State the assurance of his distinguished consideration.

HULSEMANN.

To the Hon. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State of the United States.

Secretary of State to Mr. Hulsemann.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, December 21, 1850.

The undersigned, Secretary of State of the United States, had the honor to receive some time ago, the note of Mr. Hulsemann, Charge d' Affairs of his Majesty the Emperor of Austria, of the 30th September. Causes not arising from any want of personal regard of Mr. Hulsemann, or of proper respect for his Government, have delayed an answer until the present moment. Having submitted Mr. Hulsemann's letter to the President, the undersigned is now directed by him to return the following reply:

The objects of Mr. Hulsemann's note are, first, to protest by order of his Government, against the steps taken by the late President of the United States, to ascertain the progress and probable result of the revolutionary movements in Hungary; and, secondly, to complain of some expressions in the instructions of the late Secretary of State to Mr. A. Dudley Mann a confidential agent of the United States, as communicated by President Taylor to the Senate, on the 28th of March last.

The principal ground of protest is founded on the idea, or in the allegation, that the Government of the United States, by the mission of Mr. Mann, and his instructions has interfered in the domestic affairs of Austria, in a manner unjust or disrespectful toward that power. The President's message was a communication made by him to the Senate, transmitting a correspondence between the Executive Government and a confidential agent of its own. This would seem to be itself a domestic transaction, a mere instance of intercourse between the President and the Senate, in the manner which is usual and indispensable in communications between the different branches of Government. It was not addressed either to Austria or Hungary; nor was it any public manifesto, to which any foreign State was called on to reply. It was an account of its transactions communicated by the Executive Government to the Senate, at the request of that body made public only because such is the common and usual course of proceeding; and it may be regarded as somewhat strange, therefore, that the Austrian Cabinet did not perceive that, by the instructions given to Mr. Hulsemann, it was itself interfering with the domestic concerns of a foreign State, the very thing which is the ground of its complaint against the United States.

This Department has, on former occasions, informed the Ministers of Foreign Powers that a communication from the President to either House of Congress is regarded as a domestic communication, of which ordinarily, no foreign State has cognizance; and in more recent instances the great inconvenience of making such communications subjects of diplomatic correspondence and discussion has been fully shown. If it had been the pleasure of his Majesty, the Emperor of Austria, during the struggles with Hungary, to have admonished the Provisional Government or the people of that country against involving themselves in disaster, by following the evil and dangerous example of the United States of America to making efforts for the establishment of independent Governments, such an admonition from that Sovereign to his Hungarian subjects would not have originated here a diplomatic correspondence.

The President might, perhaps on this ground have declined to direct any particular reply to Mr. Hulsemann's note; but out of proper respect for the Austrian Government, it has been thought better to answer that note at length; and the more especially as the occasion is not unfavorable for the expression of the general sentiments of the Government of the United States upon the topics which that note discusses.

A leading subject in Mr. Hulsemann's note is that of the correspondence between Mr. Hulsemann's and the predecessor of the undersigned, in which Mr. Clayton, by direction of the President, informed Mr. Hulseman "that Mr. Mann's mission had no other object in view than to obtain reliable information as to the true state of affairs in Hungary, by personal observation." Mr. Hulsemann remarks that "this explanation can hardly be admitted, for it says very little as to the cause of the anxiety which was felt to ascertain the chances of the revolutionists." As this, however, is the only purpose which can with any appearance of truth be attributed to the agency; as nothing whatever is alledged by Mr. Hulsemann to have been either done or said by the agent inconsistent with such an object, the undersigned conceives that Mr. Clayton's explanation ought to be deemed not only admissible, but quite satisfactory. Mr. Hulsemann states, in the course of his note, that his instructions to address his present communication to Mr. Clayton reached Washington about the time of the lamented death of the late President, and that he delay from a sense of propriety the execution of his task until the new Administration should be fully organized; "a delay which he now rejoices at, as it has given him the opportunity of ascertaining from the new President himself, on the occasion of the reception of the diplomatic corps, that the fundamental policy of the United States, so frequently proclaimed, would guide the relations of the American Government with other Powers." Mr. Hulsemann also observes that it is in his power to assure the undersigned "that the Imperial Government is disposed to cultivate relations of friendship and good understanding with the United States. The President receives this assurance of the disposition of the Imperial Government with great satisfaction, and, in consideration of the friendly relations of the two Governments thus mutually recognized, and of the peculiar nature of the incidents by which their good understanding is supposed by Mr. Hulsemann to have been, for a moment, disturbed or endangered, the President regrets that Mr. Hulseman did not feel himself at liberty wholly to forbear from the execution of instructions which were of course transmitted from Vienna without any foresight of the state of things under which they would reach Washington. If Mr. Hulseman saw, in the address of the President to the diplomatic corps, satisfactory pledges of the sentiments and the policy of this Government, in regard to neutral rights and neutral duties, it might, perhaps, have been better not to bring on a discussion of past transactions. But the undersigned readily admits that this was a question fit only for the consideration and decision of Mr. Hulsemann himself; and although the President does not see any good purpose can be answered by re-opening the inquiry into the propriety of the steps taken by President Taylor, to ascertain the probable issue of the late civil war in Hungary, justice to his memory requires the undersigned briefly to re-state the history of those steps, and to show their consistency with the neutral policy which has invariably guided the Government of the United States in its foreign relations, as well as with the established and well settled principles of national intercourse and the doctrines of public law.

The undersigned will first observe that the President is persuaded His Majesty the Emperor of Austria does not think that the Government of the United States ought to view, with unconcern, the extraordinary events which have occurred, not only in his dominions but in many other parts of Europe, since February, 1848. The Government and people of the United States, like other intelligent Governments and communities, take a lively interest in the movements and the events of this remarkable age, in whatever part of the world they may be exhibited. But the interest taken by the United States in those events, has not proceeded from any disposition to depart from that neutrality toward foreign Powers, which is among the deepest principles and the most cherishing traditions of the political history of the Union. It has been the necessary effect of the unexampled character of the events themselves which could not fail to arrest the attention of the contemporary world; as they would doubtless fill a memorable page in history. But the undersigned goes further, and freely admits that in proportion as these extraordinary events appeared to have their origin in those great ideas of responsible and popular governments, on which the American constitutions themselves are wholly founded, they could not but command the warm sympathy of the people of this country.

Well known circumstances in their history, indeed their whole history, have made them the representatives of purely popular principles of Government. In this light they now stand before the world. They could not, if they would, conceal their character, their condition, or their destiny. They could not, if they so desired, shut out from the view of mankind the causes which have placed them, in so short a national career, in the station which they now hold among the civilized States of the world. They could not, if they desired it, suppress either the thoughts or the hopes which arise in men's minds, in other countries, from contemplating their successful example of free government. That very intelligent and distinguished personage, the Emperor, Joseph the Second, was among the first to discern this necessary consequence of the American Revolution on the sentiments and opinions of the people of Europe. In a letter to his Minister in the Netherlands, in 1787, he observes that "it is remarkable that France by the assistance which she afforded to the Americans, gave birth to reflections of freedom." This fact, which the sagacity of that monarch perceived at so early a day, is now known and admitted by intelligent powers all over the world. True, indeed, it is, that the prevalence on the other continent of sentiments favorable to republican liberty, is the result of the re-action of America upon Europe and the source and centre of this re-action has doubtless been, and now is, in these United States. The position thus belonging to the United States is a fact as inseparable from their history, their constitutional organization, and their character, as the opposite position of the Powers composing the European alliance is from the history and constitutional organization of the Governments of those Powers. The sovereigns who form that alliance have not unfrequently felt it their right to interfere with the political movements of foreign States; and have, in their manifestoes and declarations, denounced the popular ideas of the age, in terms so comprehensive as of necessity to include the United States, and their forms of government. It is well known that one of the leading principles announced by the allied Sovereigns after the restoration of the Bourbons, is, that all popular or constitutional rights are holden no otherwise than as grants and indulgencies from crowned heads. "Useful and necessary changes in legislation and administration," says the Laybach Circular of May, 1841, "ought to emanate from the free will and intelligent conviction of those whom God has rendered responsible for power; all that deviates from this line necessarily leads to disorder, commotions, and evils far more insufferable than those which they pretend to remedy." And his late Austrian Majesty, Francis I, is reported to have declared in an address to the Hungarian Diet, in 1820, that "the whole world had become foolish, and, leaving their ancient laws, was in search of imaginary constitutions." These declarations amount to nothing less than a denial of the lawfulness of the origin of the Government of the United States, since it is certain that the Government was established in consequence of a change which did not proceed from thrones, or the permission of crowned heads. But the Government of the United States heard these denunciations of its fundamental principles without remonstrance, or the disturbance of its equanimity. This was thirty years ago.

The power of this Republic, at the present moment, is spread over a region, one of the richest and most fertile on the globe and of an extent in comparison with which the possessions of the House of Hapsburgh are but as a patch on the earth's surface. Its population, already twenty-five millions, will exceed that of the Austrian Empire within the period during which it may be hoped that M. Hulsemann may yet remain in the honorable discharge of his duties to his government. Its navigation and commerce are hardly exceeded by the oldest and most commercial nations; Its maritime means and its maritime power may be seen by Austria herself, in all seas where she has ports, as well as it may be seen, also, in all quarters of the globe. Life, liberty, property, and all personal rights are amply secured to all citizens, and protected by just and staple laws; and credit, public and private, is as well established as in any government of continental Europe. And the country, in all its interests and concerns, partakes most largely in all the improvements and progress which distinguish the age. Certainly the United States may be pardoned, even by those who profess adherence to the principles of absolute governments, if they entertain an ardent affection for those popular forms of political organization which have so rapidly advanced their own prosperity and happiness, and enabled them in so short a period to bring their country and the hemisphere to which it belongs, to the notice and respectful regard, not to say the admiration, of the civilized world. Nevertheless, the United States have abstained, at all times, from acts of interference with the political changes of Europe. They cannot, however, fail to cherish always a lively interest in the fortunes of nations struggling for institutions like their own. But this sympathy, so far from being necessarily a hostile feeling toward any of the parties to these great national struggles, is quite consistent with amicable relations with them all. The Hungarian people are three or four times as numerous as the inhabitants of those United States were when the American revolution broke out. They possess, in a distinct language and in other respects, important elements of a separate nationality, which the Anglo Saxon race in this country did not possess; and if the United States wish success to countries contending for popular constitutions and national independence, it is only because they regard such constitutions and such national independence, not as imaginary, but as real blessings. They claim no right, however, to take part in the struggles of foreign powers, in order to promote these ends. It is only in defence of his own government, and its principles and character, that the undersigned has now expressed himself on this subject. But when the United States beheld the people of foreign countries, without any such interference, spontaneously moving toward the adoption of institutions like their own, it surely cannot be expected of them to remain wholly in different spectators.

In regard to the recent very important occurrences in the Austrian empire, the undersigned freely admits the difficulty which exists in this country, and is alluded to by Mr. Hulsemann, of obtaining accurate information. But this difficulty is by no means to be ascribed to what Mr. Hulsemann calls—with little justice, as it seems to be to the undersigned—"the mendacious rumors propagated by the American press." For information on this subject, and others of the same kind, the American press is, of necessity, almost wholly dependant upon that of Europe; and if "mendacious rumors" respecting Austrian and Hungarian affairs have been any where propagated, that propagation of falsehoods has been most prolific on the European continent, and in countries immediately bordering on the Austrian empire. But, wherever these errors may have originated, they certainly justified the late President in seeking true information through authentic channels. His attention was first particularly drawn to the state of things in Hungary, by the correspondence of Mr. Stiles, Charge d' Affairs of the United States to Vienna. In the autumn of 1848 and application was made to this gentleman, on behalf of Mr. Kossuth, formerly Minister of Finance for the Kingdom of Hungary by Imperial appointment, but at the same time the application was made, Chief of the Revolutionary Government. The object of this application was to obtain the good offices of Mr. Stiles with the Imperial Government, with a view to the suspension of hostilities. This application became the subject of a conference between Prince Schwarzenburg, the Imperial Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Stiles. The Prince commended the considerateness and propriety with which Mr. Stiles had acted; and, so far from disapproving his interference, advised him, in case he received a further communication from the Revolution Government in Hungary, to have an interview with Prince Windisgratz, who was charged by the Emperor with the proceedings determined on in relation to that Kingdom. A week after these occurrences, Mr. Stiles received, through a secret channel, a communication signed by L. Kossuth, President of the Committee of Defence, and countersigned by Francis Pulsky, Secretary of State. On the receipt of this communication, Mr. Stiles had an interview with Prince Windisgratz, who received him with the utmost kindness, and thanked him for his efforts towards reconciling the existing difficulties. Such were the incidents which first drew the attention of the Government of the United States particularly to the affairs of Hungary, and the conduct of Mr. Stiles, though acting without instructions in a matter of much delicacy, having been viewed with satisfaction by the Imperial Government, was approved by that of the United States.

In the course of the year 1848, and in the early part of 1849, a considerable number of Hungarians came to the United States. Among them were individuals representing themselves to be in the confidence of the Revolutionary Government, and by these persons the President was strongly urged to recognize the existence of that Government. In these applications, and in the manner in which they were viewed by the President, there was nothing unusual; still less was there any thing authorized by the law of nations. It is the right of every independent State to enter into friendly relations with every other independent State. Of course questions of prudence naturally arise in reference to new States, brought by successful revolutions into the family of nations; but it is not to be required of neutral Powers that they should await the recognition of the new Government by the parent State. No principle of public law has been more frequently acted upon within the last thirty years by the great Powers of the world than this. Within that period eight or ten new states have established independen Governments within the limits of the colonial dominion of Spain, on this continent; and in Europe the same thing has been done by Belgium and Greece. The existence of all these Governments was recognised by some of the leading Powers of Europe, as well as by the United States, before it was acknowledged by the States from which they had separated themselves. If, therefore, the United States had gone so far as formerly to acknowledge the independence of Hungary, although, as the result have proved, it would have been a precipitate step, and one from which no benefit would result to either party, it would not, nevertheless, have been an act against the law of nations, provided they took no part in her contest with Austria. But the United States did no such thing. Not only did they not yield to Hungary any actual countenance or succor; not only did they not show their ships of war in the Adriactic with any menacing or hostile aspect, but they studiously abstained from everything which had not been done in other cases in time past, and contented themselves with instituting an inquiry into the truth and reality of alleged political occurrences. Mr. Hulsemann incorrectly states, unintentionally certainly, the nature of the mission of this agent when he says that "a United States agent had been dispatched to Vienna with orders to watch for a favorable moment to recognise the Hungarian republic, and to conclude a treaty of commerce with the same." This, indeed, would have been a lawful object, but Mr. Mann's errand was, in the first intance, purely of inquiry. He had no power to act, unless he had first come to the conviction that a firm and stable Hungarian Government existed. The principle object the President has in view," according to his instructions, "is to obtain minute and reliable information in regard to Hungary in connection with the affairs of adjoining countries, the present revolutionary movements, and the chances we may have of forming commercial arrangements with that power favorable to the United States." Again, in the same paper, it is said. "The object of the President is to obtain information in regard to Hungary and her resources and prospects, with a view to an early recognition of her independence and the formation of commercial relations with her." It was only in the event that the new Government should appear in the opinion of the agent, to be firm and stable, that the President proposed to recommend its recognition.

Mr. Hulsemann, in qualifying these steps of President Taylor with the epithet of "hostile," seems to take for granted that the inquiry could, in the expectation of the President, have but result, and that favorable to Hungary. If this were so, it would not change the case. But the American Government sought for nothing but truth; it desired to learn the facts through a reliable channel. It so happened in the chances and vicissitudes of human affairs, that the result was adverse to the Hungarian revolution. The American agent—as was stated in his instructions to be not unlikely—found the condition of Hungarian affairs less prosperous than it had been, or had been believed to be. He did not enter Hungary, nor hold any direct communication with her revolutionary leaders. He reported against the recognition of her independence, because he found that she had been unable to set up a firm and stable government. He carefully forbore as his instructions required, to give publicity to his mission, and the undersigned supposes that the Austrian Government first learned its existence from the communications of the President to the Senate.

Mr. Hulsemann will observe from this statement, that Mr. Mann's mission was wholly unobjectionable, and strictly within the rule of the law of nations, and the duty of the United States as a neutral Power. He will accordingly feel how little foundation there is for his remark, that "those who did not hesitate to assume the responsibility of sending Mr. Dudley Mann on such an errand should, independent of considerations of propriety, have borne in mind, that they were exposing their emissary to be treated as a spy." A spy is a person sent by one belligerent to gain secret information of the forces and defences of the other, to be used for hostile purposes. According to practice, he may use deception, under the penalty of being lawfully hanged if detected. To give this odious name and character to a confidential agent of a neutral Power, bearing the commission of his country, and sent for a purpose fully warranted by the law of nations, is not only to abuse language, but also to confound all just ideas, and to announce the wildest and most extravagant notions, such as certainly were not to have been expected in a grave diplomatic paper; and the President directs the undersigned to say to Mr. Hulsemann, that the American Government would regard such an imputation upon it by the Cabinet of Austria, as that it employs spies, and that in a quarrel none of its own, as distinctly offensive, if it did not presume, as it is willing to presume, that the word used in the original German was not of equivalent meaning with "spy" in the English language, or that in some other way the employment of such an opprobrious tegm may be explained. Had the Imperial Government of Austria subjected Mr. Mann to the treatment of a spy, it would have placed itself without the pale of civilized nations; and the Cabinet of Vienna may be assured that if it had carried, or attempted to carry, any such lawless purpose into effect, in the case of an authorized agent of this Government, the spirit of the people of this country would have demanded immediate hostilities to be waged by the utmost exertion of the power of the Republic, military and naval.

Mr. Hulsemann proceeds to remark that "this extremely painful incident, therefore, might have been passed over, without any written evidence being left on our part in the archives of the United States, had not General Taylor thought proper to revive the whole subject, by communicating to the Senate, in his message of the 18th (28th) of last March, the instructions with which Mr. Mann had been furnished on the occasion of his mission to Vienna. The publicity which has been given to that document has placed thh Imperial Government under the necessity of entering a formal protest, through its official representative, against the proceedings of the American Government, lest that Government shou'd construe our silence into approbating, or toleration even, of the principles which appear to have guided its action and means it has adopted." The undersigned re-asserts to Mr. Hulsemann, and to the Cabinet of Vienna, and in the presence of the world, that the steps taken by President Taylor, now protested against by the Austrian Government, were warranted by the law of nations, and agreeable to the usages of civilized States. With respect to the communication of Mr. Mann's instructions to the Senate, and the language in which they are couched, it has already been said, and Mr. Hulsemann must feel the justice of the remark, that these are domestic affairs, in reference to which the Government of the United States cannot admit the slightest responsibility to the Government of his Imperial Majesty. No State, deserving the appellation of independent, can permit the language in which it may instruct its own officers in the discharge of their duties to itself to be called in question under any pretext by a foreign Power. But, even if this were not so, Mr. Hulsemann is in an error in stating that the Austrian Government is called an "Iron Rule" in Mr. Mann's instructions. That phrase is not found in the paper; and in respect to the honorary epithet bestowed in Mr. Mann's instructions on the late chief of the Revolutionary Government of Hungary, Mr. Hulsemann will bear in mind that the Government of the United States cannot justly be expected, in a confidential communication to its agent, to withhold from an individual an epithet of distinction of which a great part of the world thinks him worthy, merely on the ground that his own government regards him as a rebel.

At an early stage of the American Revolution, while Washington was considered by the English Government as a rebel chief, he was regarded on the continent of Europe as an illustrious hero. But the undersigned will take the liberty of bringing the Cabinet of Vienna into the presence of its own predecessors, and of citing for its own consideration the conduct of the Imperial Government itself. In the year 1777, the war of the American Revolution was raging all over these United States; England was prosecuting that war with a most resolute determination, and by the exertion of all her military means to the fullest extent. Germany was at that time at peace with England; yet an order of that Congress, which was looked upon by England in no other light than that of a body in open rebellion, was not to be received with great respect by the Ambassador of the Empress Queen at Tunis, and by the Minister of the Grand Duke of Tuscany who afterwards mounted the imperial throne, but resided in Vienna for a considerable time; not, indeed officially acknowledged, but treated with courtesy and respect; and the Emperor suffered himself to be persuaded by that agent to exert himself to prevent the German powers from furnishing troops to England to enable her to suppress the rebellion in America. Neither Mr. Hulseman, nor the cabinet of Vienna, it is presumed, will undetake to say that anything said or done by this government in regard to the recent war between Austria and Hungary is not borne out, and much more than borne out by this example of Imperial Court. It is believed that the Emperor Joseph the Second, habitually spoke in terms of respect and admiration of the character of Washington, as he is known to have done that of Franklin; and he deemed it no infraction of neutrality to inform himself of the progress of the revolutionary struggle in America, nor to express his deep sense of the merits and the talents of those illustrious men who were then leading their country to independence and renown. The undersigned may add, that in 1781 the Courts of Russia and Austria proposed a diplomatic Congress of the belligerent Powers, to which the Commissioners of the United States should be admitted.

Mr. Hulsemann thinks that in Mr. Mann's instructions improper expressions are introduced in regard to Russia; but the undersigned has no reason to suppose that Russia herself is of that opinion. The only observation made in those instructions about Russia is that she "has chosen to assume an attitude of interference, and her immense preparations for invading and reducing the Hungarians to the rule of Austria—from which they desired to be released—gave so serious a character to the contest as to awaken the most painful solicitude in the minds of Americans." The undersigned cannot but consider the Austrian Cabinet as unnecessarily susceptible in looking upon language like this as a "hostile demonstration." If we remember that it was addressed by the Government to its own agent, and has received publicly only through a communication from one Department of the American Government to another, the language quoted must be deemed moderate and inoffensive. The comity of nations would hardly forbid its being addressed to the two Imperial Powers themselves. It is scarcely necessary for the undersigned to say, that the relations of the United States with Russia have always been of the most friendly kind, and have never been deemed by either party to require any compromise of their peculiar views upon subjects of domestic or foreign polity or the the true origin of Governments. At any rate, the fact that Austria in her contest with Hungary, had an intimate and faithfully ally in Russia, cannot alter the real nature of the question between Austria and Hungary, nor in any way affect the neutral rights and duties of the Government of the United States or the justifiable synipathies of the American people. It is, indeed, easy to conceive that favor toward struggling Hungary would not be diminished, but increased, when it was seen that the arm of Austria was strengthened and upheld by a power whose assistance threatened to be, and which in the end proved to be, overwhelmingly destructive of all her hopes.

Towards the conclusion of his note, Mr. Hulsemann remarks that "if the Government of the United States were to think it proper to take an indirect part in the polttical movements of Europe, American policy would be exposed to acts of retaliation, and to certain inconveniences which would not fail to affect the commerce and industry of the hemispheres." As to this possible fortune, this hypothetical retaliation, the Government and people of the United States are quite willing to take their chances and abide their destiny. Taking neither a direct nor an indirect part in the domestic or intestine movements of Europe, they have no fear of events of the nature alluded to by Mr. Hulsemann. It would be idle now to discuss with Mr. Hulsemann those acts of retaliation which he imagines may possibly take place at some indefinite time hereafter. Those questions will be discussed when they arise, and, Mr. Hulseman and the Cabinet at Vienna may rest assured that in the meantime, while performing with strict and exact fidelity all their neutral duties, nothing will deter either the Government or the people of the United States from exercising at their own discretion the rights belonging to them as an independent nation, and of forming and expressing their own opinions, freely and at all times, upon the great political events which may transpire among the civilized nations of the earth. Their own institutions stand upon the broadest principles of civil liberty; and believing those principles and the fundamental laws in which they are embodied to be eminently favorable to the prosperity of States—to be, in fact, the only principles of Government which meet the demands of the present enlightened age—the President has perceived with great satisfacton that, in the Constitution recently introduced into the Austrian empire, many of these great principles are recognized and applied, and he cherishes a sincere wish that they may produce the same happy effects throughout the Austrian Majesty's extensive dominions that they have done in the United States.

The undersigned has the honor to repeat to Mr. Hulsemann the assurance of his high consideration.

Prospects of the Church.

The Church in Pottawatamie county was never more united than at the present time. Since some disaffected and murmuring ones have left, and gone to the Valley, where they will be dealt with for their own good, the various branches have seemingly melted down into a union, that, we trust, will continue without interruption. There now appears a bright prospect of an early Spring; and the farming interests of this country are being pressed forward with zeal and animation by a large portion of the inhabitants; while another portion are making active preparations for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.

Our exchanges say that Brewster is broken up, and his company dispersed at Santa Fe. If this is untrue, it is not untrue that he soon will be. Strang will make his own snare and be taken in it. Cutler and his followers are so upright that they, like the boy's tree, lean a little the other way. They who gather not with us, scatter abroad; and the first and most prominent signs of Apostacy, are relations of terrible bad news or tales from the Valley—all sick and dying there—starving to death—Indians killing them, &c., &c. Besides, they are quarrelling at the Bluffs or somewhere else. We would advise all such characters, to save their breath to cool their porridge; and not think the Saints have gone astray because condemnation and fear have filled their own hearts. The cause of truth is on the increase in Pottawatamie and Mills counties. A goodly number of our Methodist friends in Mills county have recently been baptized into our church, and in this town there are more or less baptized almost every week. The cause is prospering in England, Wales, and in Scotland; also on the continent of Europe—in Italy—in Denmark and in Norway; and quite a branch, we hear, is built up in Calcutta. His majesty, the King of Denmark, has accepted the Book of Mormon who, with other members of the Royal family, is examining it. The Book of Mormon will be at the World's Fair, in the English, French and Danish Languages by the industry and perseverance of our Missionaries in those countries. They have strong prejudices to face and to overcome; there is an Arm on which they can lean for help which is more mighty and powerful than the traditions and prejudices of the age; and while immortality beams upon the eye that is single, the sword of truth can be wielded to cut asunder the cords which have bound, so long, the inhabitants of the earth in ignorance, superstition and folly. May the Angel of Mercy sustain those laborers abroad, and nerve them with power and wisdom adequate to every emergency that may arise before them! Let the prayers of the faithful ascend on high that these swift messengers to the nations may light up the world so brilliantly that the honest in heart may see clearly, and not stumble! "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that publisheth glad tidings, &c." Hope inspires activity—activity produces the means of life, and sets all the wheels of improvement in rapid motion. "Fly swifter round ye wheels of time, and bring the welcome day."

But a few years ago, little was said about slavery and Abolitionism. It was considered then treasonable to think or talk of dividing the Union; But how rapidly has restraint, upon these subjects, fled away! States now talk of seceding from the Union—of arming themselves for the fight: Men in high places, call the Union a damnable humbug, and others set the laws at defiance with a reckless security and desperate carelessness. After the ties are cut asunder which held religionists, of the same creed, together: How long before political bonds will be thrown off like the surplus clothing of two about to engage in mortal combat? The days are numbered, and the Almighty knoweth the times of visitaion and trouble. If these things were done in the green tree, what will be done in the dry? And if judgment began at the House of God, what shall the end of them be that obey not the Gospel of God? We say not these things because we wish misery and confusion in the land! No, America is our home and country. We know no other—we seek no other; and while we live, may the "Stars and Stripes" that have floated on the breeze to please the eye and gladden the heart of every son and daughter of Columbia, continue to grace the American name while the constellations of the heavens shine upon our land and upon our sea! But we say them because the Prophets of old have said them; and we, their children, wish to sustain the honor of our fathers, and lead many of our brethren to see and embrace the truth.

"He shall send forth his angels and gather out of his Kingdom all things that offend, and that do iniquity" He has angels for all purposes that he wishes to accomplish. Some are vessels of honor, and some of dishonor. Hence the necessity of a Strang, a Brewster, a Rigdon and a Cutler, to gather the offensive ones out; as the Buzzard diligently removes putrid flesh, because he loves it, and by his labors, he secures to us a pure and fragrant air, the inhaling of which gives life and health.

As We Anticipated.

The following letter from a prominent citizen of Fremont, and an honorable man, disclaims the sentiments uttered by the Hon. Benjamin Rector, at the Convention on the 14th inst. We thought and verily believed we knew several honorable and good feeling gentlemen at Austin, and likewise in other parts of the county, whose marked courtesy and kindness towards us personally, had not become so suddenly changed into the gall of bitterness.

Had the spirit of Col. Farmers letter been breathed into the Convention, from Fremont, in place of Mr. Rectors views, it would have had a very different effect. This letter is just what we might expect from a generous and high-minded man.

With Mr. Brown, we have not the pleasure of an acquaintance; but presume him to be a gentleman, qualified for the office. Had he been better known to us, and to the people in this quarter, it might have been more to his advantage, and perhaps to ours. But with all respect for Mr. Brown, we would say; that we endeavored to make the Convention as public as we were able, and the place where it was held was suggested by Mr. Rector, from Fremont. Every member of that Convention pledged himself with uplifted hand to use all honorable means in his power, to support the nominee of said Convention. James Sloan, Esq., was that nominee; and now to be consistent, we feel it our duty to give him our unqualified and undivided support.

Though some of the Mormons are going to leave for the Salt Lake; yet two will come, where one will leave: But Mr. Sloan does not design to leave, but to remain as a permanent citizen of Pottawatamie; and it is our candid opinion, based upon the best information that we can gain, that he is better qualified for that office than any other man in the District. We have just been to his office, and examined his records of marriage licenses returned; and it is our opinion that for neatness, legibility, and fair style, there is not another record in the State, of any kind, that will compare with it. We fancy sometimes that the pen is handsomely wielded in our office; but for recording, we have seen nothing handsomer than Mr. Sloan's Penmanship. It is like print itself.

We are not, therefore, inclined to reject true merit, gained by integrity and uprightness in the transaction of public business—neither scholarship or legal attainments that can and will command respect in any law abiding community. There exists no legal impediment in his way to the Judgeship.

Every man who has resided in the State six months, and in the county twenty days next preceding the day of the election is entitled to vote, provided he is a native born citizen of the United States, or a foreigner may vote if he has been duly naturalized. All legal voters must be twenty-one years old and upwards. It is hoped that no legal voter will stay away from the polls on the first Monday in April next.

McKisick's Grove, Iowa.
March 3, 1851.

Friend Hyde: I see from the proceedings in your Convention for the nomination of a Judge of the Sixth Judicial District, that the Hon. Mr. Rector, made statements, that there was a strong affinity between the State of Mitsouri, and Fremont county, Iowa, to resist the election of a Mormon to that office. I for one dissent from such declarations, and believe that there is no such understanding, and that the majority of the citizens, will vouch for what I say; and believe that the Mormons were excited into a nomination of one of their Church by such declarations than otherwise from an article in your former paper.

The greatest objection to the election of a Mormon is that they are considered as only sojourners here for a short time, and do not design making this their permanent abode, and in consequence, Mr. C. B. Brown, Esq., is candidate for the Judegship. In him you will find that he will act the honorable part in the canvass, and will be far from indulging in any of the forebodings set forth by Mr. Rector; and if he is beat will yield to the will, and submit to the voice of the ballot box, as I hope all good citizens will do. It is not for me or any individual to say which of the two would render the most satisfaction to our mixed community, but will leave it to the free and independant voters to say, but hoping that harmony and the best good feelings may prevail.

Yours, respectfully,
T. FARMER, P. M.

To Orson Hyde, Esq.

N. B. We will get an expression from our citizens, to see whether Mr. Rector was authorized to make such declarations, or whether he took it upon himself or not, for your satisfaction. T. F.

Weather.

The weather for several days past has been remarkably pleasant, but rather cool.

Patriarchal.

Elder William Draper, Patriarch of this branch of the Church, is desirous of going to the Valley; and he wishes those who are indebted to him, to pay him with as little delay as possible. He is ever ready to attend to the duties of his calling, and those who may wish his services, had better secure them while he is within their reach; and by so doing, secure the virture and benefits of his office, while he may secure favor from you to an extent that will enable him to provide himself some of the comforts necessary for his long journey.

Mr. Hulsemann's and the American Secretary's correspondence is published in this days paper because of numerous solicitations of the citizens of this and adjoining Counties, who are all anxious to read it. We should have published it before had not our paper been crowded with other matter. This Correspondence cannot fail to be acceptable to all who have not previously read it.

A disobedient Son will seldom make a good husband; or a disobedient Daughter a good wife. A wag said that the first was correct, but the last was correct-her still.

What Is Our Duty!

Mr. Benton, Democratic Candidate for Superintendant of Public Instruction, and William G. Woodward of Muscatine, Whig Candidate for the same office, have both requested us, through their friends, or rather; their friends have requested us to present them to the public eye. We presume that both these gentlemen are abundantly qualified for the office, and are good men. We have placed both their names upon the "Union Ticket" as candidates, and they are now fairly out: It is known to what political party we adhere, and we shall give the weight of our influence in favor of Mr. Woodward, the Whig Candidate. Our whig friends stood by us in times of trouble; and now we are in justice and in honor bound to reciprocate that favor. We should not only consider it our duty, but a very great privilege to do so. Vote then, en masse, for William G. Woodward—a staunch whig, an able lawyer,—a husband and a father whose domestic relations afford him all the means of appreciating education, and present to him the great incentive to action, and that too, in our behalf. William G. Woodward Esq., is the man for whom we should cast our votes on the first Mouday in April, which is the 7th inst., for Superintendant of Public Instruction. Every man should be at the polls and do his duty to himself and to his country on that day.

Places of Holding Election

On Monday, the 7th inst.
Kanesville,
Trading Point,
Coonville,
Indiantown,
Harris Grove, and Rocky Ford.

Those who reside not more than thirteen miles North of Kanesville, will be entitled to vote here, and those residing in and East of the Bluffs for eleven miles South of Kanesville, may vote here. The lines are not yet definitely run, and it is therefore impossible to arrive at exactness; but we will get as nearly to the truth and correctness of our localities as we can, and call that lawful. Every man should vote somewhere, and only vote in one place, and he will not be far wrong.

Question in Theology.

Will any person please answer this question through the Guardian? What is the difference between the doctrine of a God without body, parts or passions; and the doctrine of the fool, "who hath said in his heart, there is no God?" They appear, to our dull comprehension, synonomous=Definition of nothing; absence of substance, parts or passions. We believe the preacher who said his God was never seen, neither indeed could be seen; and we will add, for the best of all reasons, there is nothing to see. No intelligent mind doubts his declarations for a moment, neither doubts that his nett is cast on the wrong side of the ship.

Elder Stoddard.

This laborer in the vineyard is now confined by sickness; and those who wish to help him or his family should not wait for some one to be sent round to receive donations. The plain English of this excuse is. "I do not want to help him at all." If any one really wishes to help him, he can do it at once, and be the personal bearer of the tokens of good will that he owes to Br. Stoddard and to his family. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

Mr. John Sherratt.

It is well known to this community that the above named gentleman is deprived of hearing and speech; and being naturally free and generous hearted, advantages are often taken of him to his hurt, and to the prodigal squandering of his property by which himself and family may be reduced to want.

This is therefore to apprise all whom it may concern, that no debts of his contracting will be paid, unless his trustee authorize the said debts to be contracted. By mutual consent, and by the approval of the Statute. We are appointed said trustee.

Hon. Daniel F. Miller.

This gentleman is still mindful of us, and with his accustomed courtesy and kindness, sends us valuable public documents by which we are brought under renewed obligations of gratitude and goodwill.

Virtue.

Virtue and innocence carry their own coat of arms, and the weapons of their defence are, first: Sterling example,—a strictly moral and upright course of life;—freedom from all appearances of evil,—leaving no peg for an enemy to hang suspicion upon. Genuine virtue is generally prepared with these weapons, and she can most successfully defend herself and plead her own cause: While doubtful virtue requires art and cunning to conceal or explain away her doings.

Reese's Hoes.

Mr. Reese, of this town has manufactured some of the best Hoes that we have ever seen. His shop is at Carter's Old Stand, and may be known by the sign of the anvil. Call and look at his hoes. They are worth seeing if you do not purchase.

To perfect happiness below.

In this town, on Tuesday, April 1st, by the same, Doctor F. R. KINSMAN to Mrs. DRUZILLA SEYMOUR, both of this town.

If this couple only knew how many good wishes were expressed towards them over the cake and wine sent to the Printers, they might draw consolation therefrom through life. Only keep on good terms with the ladies, and we'll get plenty of cake and wine, and if they will only keep on comfortable terms with the Printer, they will be sure to get good husbands. When the ladies and the Press form an alliance, woe be to the balance that have to come under the lash of their tongues. The ladies and the Press: They govern the world, God bless them.

STRAYED from the subscriber, about the 26th of March last a grey mare pony, barefoot and thin. Harness marks very plain upon her sides, and a remarkable burn across the hips which has caused the skin to lay in ridges, though covered with hair. She was driven through from Salt Lake last fall, and has remained thin in flesh. Whoever will return said Grey pony to me shall be suitably rewarded. ORSON HYDE.

Kanesville, April 4, 1851.

The Frontier Guardian.

FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 1851.

For the Frontier Guardian.

IOWA CITY, March 16th, 1851.

REV. & DEAR SIR:—I congratulate you upon the action of the late General Assembly in placing your County within the pales of civilization, and that you are no longer to be treated by any as a lawless banditti.

Those constitutional rights and privileges which, heretofore have been so unjustly withheld from that interesting portion of the State having been confered, carry with them the important and permanent duty of electing good and competent men to office.

In this connection permit me to call your attention to the office of Superintendant of Public Instruction, the most important office created under the Constitution. The juvenile mind of the State, in a political sense, is the property of the State, hence, through the medium of our School System this officer becomes respousible for the proper training of the rising generation, as well as for the good management of the funds placed at his disposal for that object.

Without the instruction of a party convention, the People have put in nomination for this office W. G. Woodward, Esq., a gentleman of high literary and legal attainments, a thorough business man, one who if elected will restore order out of Chaos

Mr. W. is no political Demagogue, although a Whig, he disclaims the principle of carrying party politics into the schools of the State, this is as it should be, and was the doctrine of the much wronged and persecuted Mr. Harlan, who beat Judge Mason upon that issue before the people three years ago for this same office, more than four hundred votes.

Please place the enclosed three dollars to my credit on account of the Guardian, acknowledging receipt of same.

Very Respectfully,
Your Obt. Servant.
JOHN M. COLEMAN.

Terrible Tornado.

Fayetteville, Tenessee, in Ruins!!!—Great Destruction of Property—Lamentable Loss of Life!!!

NASHVILLE, Feb. 26—3 P. M.

By the mail to-night, a house in this city received the following intelligence:

FAYETTEVILLE, Tenn., Feb. 25.

A few minutes past four o'clock yesterday morning, a great portion of our town was laid in ruins, by a storm which swept everything before it. Webb & Smith, Goodrich's and John McPhail's stores, were blown down to the second floor. Both hotels were badly injured. Hine's new building was riddled, Bagley's, Isaac's, Mrs. J. V. McKinney's, B. S. Russell's, Homon's, Wm. Nield's, Jr., C. P. Church's, Berry's, Washburn's, Mrs. Shall's, the Garvin House, and many others, were blown entirely down, not even the foundations left. Dr. R. R. McKinney's, Dr. C. McKinney's, Mrs. Greer's house; James L. Thompson's and other's, are an entire wreck. The chimney and east gable of Seed's house fell on to the roof of Nick's store, and smashed it in. Dr. M. H. Borum's and S. M. Bright's houses were unroofed. Several offices, the market-house, stables, and smoke houses were blown down.

Mrs. Bowzee and child are dead. A. H. Berry's oldest child was killed, and he nearly so. Several others were dangerously, and many seriously wounded. Cows, horses and stock are dead in every direction.

The Presbyterian church, Cumberland Presbyterian church, market-house, Stonebreaker's tanyard, and all the buildings around are totally destroyed. McNeil's stables and kitchen were blown down.

The tornado came from the south-west.

Imagine a besom sweeping everything before it—houses, trees, fences, rails, planks, &c.,—and you have even then failed to realize the full extent of havoc. But the saddest scene of all was to witness the human sufferings. Scarcely could you meet a citizen that was not bruised or maimed.

In addition to those mentioned as killed, the following were seriously hurt. Dr. R. R. McKinney, Mrs. R. R. McKinney, Joel McKinney, C. McKinney, R. McKinney, C. C. McKinney, a daughter of L. S. Stone, Miss Martha McKinney, two sons of J. L. Thompson, two sons of Mr. Rogers, son of R. L. Russell, M. Gordon, daughter of Mrs. Ewen, and many others whose names are not remembered.

The tornado passed off a north-east direction.

A Chance for Inventors.

The New York Tribune has been authorized, by George Bruce, Esq., to offer a premium of $1000 to the first inventor who shall construct and submit for judgment, a press, which will throw off five hundred large imperial sheets per hour, and can be built and sold for $500. The cost of working the press is not to be greater than that of the Smith press—the patent right, of course, to remain with the inventor.

The Cheap Postage Bill.

This bill, passed at the recent session of Congress, will go into effect on the first of July. From the rate established by the bill, which we publish in another column, it will be seen that weekly papers circulate in the county where they are published, free of postage, and within fifty miles of the place of publication, the postage is only twenty cents per year. This is an excellent provision, and will be an inducement to encourage home papers. We hope our citizens will profit by the hint given them by Congress, and stand up to the support of their own papers.—[St. Joseph Gazette.

NEW FUEL.—A locomotive engine is being built at a shop near this city, which is to be something of a novelty. Nothing but alcohol is to be used for heating the boiler. It is constructed upon a principal heretofore untried, but it is expected to be entirely successful in its operation. It is built for the Erie railroad, and it will be tested on that road next week. We hope it may succeed, for we have never heard of a more suitable way of using up the fluid designed to be used.—[New York Tribune.

LOUISVILLE, March 14.

The steamer G. W. Kendall, bound for St. Louis when one mile above Brandenburg, under full head of steam, and in the middle of the river, burst the cylinder head of her larboard engine mud valve and stand pipe, instantly killing the carpenter and breaking the legs of one deck hand. Some six or eight horses on board were killed, and as many scalded. The boat was completely enwrapped in steam, and many, in seeking a place of safety, went overboard, the steam prevented them from seeing, and not knowing what had happened.

Two men on shore say they distinctly saw twenty or thirty persons in the river at one time; among them one woman, not one of them were saved. It is supposed many jumped overboard, and were drowned. Several horses broke loose and swam ashore.

Military Land Warrants.

Some how or other, the joint resolution of Congress, making land warrants issued under the act of 28th September, 1850, assignable, failed to become a law. It passed both Houses, being amended in the Senate in some unimportant particulars, but it was not returned to the House in time to be acted upon in that branch. In consequence of this failure, the old warrants have advanced in price, and they are quoted in New York at $135. This demand will not continue for any length of time.—Rep.

Special Session of the Senate.

WASHINGTON, March 13.

Shortly after meeting, the Senate went into executive session; their being no quorum present, the doors were re-opened.

A resolution was adopted, requested the President to furnish, at the next session of Congress, all the information in his possession relative to claims incurred in the conquest of Californin.

A resolution of thanks to the Honorable W. R. King, for the impartial manner in which he had discharged the duties as presiding officer of the Senate, was adopted.

Mr. King replied, returning thanks to them for the many courtesies extended to him; he then pronounced the Senate adjourned sine die.

The Senate then adjourned.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Extract from the Act of Congress of 3d March, 1845, section 18.

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General, in all future lettings of contracts for the transportation of the mail, to let the same, in every case, to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guarantees for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of such transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation; nor shall any new contractor hereafter be required to purchase out, or take at a valuation, the stock or vehicle of any previous contractor for the same route."

Bidders will be careful to read the forms and instructions appended to this advertisement. They are requested to state, in their proposals, the mode by which they intend to convey the mail. Where the size and weight of the mails, or the speed called for in the schedules shall require it, the contracts will be made for coach, steamboat, or railroad conveyance, as the case may be, and, consequently, such routes will be let to bids proposing such mode of conveyance. In all other cases, the routes will be assigned to bids proposing the cheapest mode of transportation.

Railroad companies are specially notified that their regular bids are to be understood as including the supply of each office on the line of their respective roads, not over a quarter of a mile from a depot. Separate proposals for offices more than a quarter of a mile off will be considered.

PROPOSALS for carrying the mails of the United States from the 1st day of July, 1851, to the 30th of June, 1854, inclusive in

UTAH TERRITORY,

Bidders are requested to state the distance, and give schedule.

Form for a Bid where no change from advertisement is contemplated by the bidder.

"I (or we, as the case may be) [here write the name or names in full] of [here state the residence or residences] hereby propose to carry the mail on route No. from to as often as the Postmaster General's advertisement for proposals on the same, dated January 15, 1851, requires, in the time stated in the schedules contained in such advertisement, and by the following mode of conveyance, to wit: [here state how it is to be conveyed,] for the annual sum of [here write out the sum in words at full length.]

Dated [Signed.]

Form of a Guaranty to accompany each bid.

"The undersigned [here insert the name of the guarantor or guarantors] guaranties that, [here insert name of bidder or names of bidders, as the case may be,] if his (or their) bid for carrying the mail from to be accepted by the Postmaster General, shall enter into the contract required by the Postmaster General, pursuant to such bid, prior to the first day of July next, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed."

Dated [Signed.]

Form of Certificate.

The undersigned, Postmaster of , certifies that he is well acquainted with the guarantors above named and their property, and that they are sufficient and able to make good their guaranty.

INSTRUCTIONS,

Embracing certain conditions, which will be incorporated in the contracts.

1. Seven minutes are allowed for opening and closing the mails at all offices where no particular time is specified; but on railroad and steamboat routes there is to be no more delay than is necessary to deliver and receive the bags.

2. The mail to be conveyed in preference to passengers, and to their entire exclusion, if its weight and bulk require it.

3. Post office blanks, mail bags, and the special agents of the Department, on the exhibition of their credentials, are to be conveyed without further charge, on mail lines admitting of such conveyance.

4. Mail agents are to be conveyed without charge on the principal railroad and steamboat lines, where the size of the mails and number of the offices will require their employment by the Department; and in that case, a separate apartment for the exclusive use of the Department and agent, for the assorting and safe-keeping of the mail is to be provided by the contractor, and under the direction of the Department.

5. In all cases there is to be a forfeiture of the pay of the trip when the trip is not run; and of not more than three times the pay of the trip when the trip is not run, and no sufficient excuse for the failure is furnished, a forfeiture of at least one-fourth part of it when the running or arrival is so far behind time as to lose the connection with a depending mail; and a forfeiture of a due proportion of it when a grade of service is rendered inferior to that in the contract. These forfeitures may be increased into penalties of higher amount, according to the nature or frequency of the failure and the importance of the mail.

6. Fines will be imposed unless the delinquency be satisfactorily explained in due time, for failing to take from, or deliver at, a post office, the mail, or any part of it; for suffering it to be wet, injured, lost, or destroyed; or conveying it in a place or manner that exposes it to depredation, loss, or injury; for refusing after demand to convey a mail by any coach, railroad car, or steamboat, which the contractor regularly runs on the route beyond the specified number of trips in the contract, and for not arriving at the time set; and for setting up or running an express to transmit commercial intelligence in advance of the mail, a penalty will be exacted equal to a quarter's pay.

7. The Postmaster General may annual the contract for repeated failures; for violating the post office laws; for disobeying the instructions of the Department; for refusing to discharge a carrier when required by the Department; for assigning the contract without the consent of the Postmaster General, or for setting up or running an express as aforesaid.

8. The Postmaster General may alter the contract, and alter the schedule, he allowing a pro rata increase of compensation, within the restrictions imposed by law, for the additional service required, or for the increased speed, if the employment of additional stock or carriers is rendered necessary; but the contractor may, in such case, relinquish the contract, on timely notice, if he prefers it to the change. The Postmaster General may annul the contract or curtail the service and pay, when he wishes to dispense with the service, in whole or in part, or place a higher or different grade of service on the route, he allowing one month's extra pay on the amount dispensed with.

9. The payments will be made through drafts on post offices or otherwise, after the expiration of each quarter—say in February, May, August, and November.

10. The distances are given according to the best information; but no increased pay will be allowed, should they prove to be greater than is advertised if the places are correctly named.

11. The Postmaster General is prohibited by law from knowingly making a contract for the transportation of the mail with any person who shall have entered into any combination, or proposed to enter into any combination, to prevent the making of any bid for a mail contract by any other person or persons, or who shall have made any agreement, or shall have given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration to do, or not to do, any thing whatever to induce any other person not to bid for a mail contract. Particular attention is called to the 28th section of the act of 1836, prohibiting combinations to prevent bidding.

12. A bid received after time, to wit, the 1st of April next, at 10 a. m., or without the guaranty required by law, or that combines several routes in one sum of compensation, cannot be considered in competition with the regular proposal not adjudged to be extravagant.

13. A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons; to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance, or to intermit service a specified number of day, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute and inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and it is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodations is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip, during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiarly bad roads; but beyond these changes, a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations, their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

14. There should be but one route bid for in a proposal.

15. The route, the service, the yearly pay, the bidder's name and residence, and the name of each member of the firm, where a company offers, should be distinctly stated; also the mode of conveyance, if a higher mode than on horse-back is intended.

16. The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals in the State or Territory of———" written on the face of the letter; and should be dispatched in time to be received by or before the 1st of April next, at 10 o'clock, a. m. It should be guaranteed, and the sufficiency of the guarantors be duly certified. (See forms.)

17. The contracts are to be executed by or before the 1st of July next.

18. Postmasters at offices situated upon or near railroads, but more than eighty rods from a depot, will immediately after the 19th April next, report that fact to the Department, stating their exact distances from the railroad depot, and how otherwise supplied with the mail, to enable the Postmaster General to direct the proper supply to be made from the railroad by mail messengers, from and after the 1st of July next.

19. Under the act of March 3d, 1845, the route is to be let to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation.

When the lowest bid proposes a mode of conveyance, that is inadequate for the route in respect to the certainty, security, and celerity of the mails, aside from any accommodation for travel, it will not be entitled to the route.

20 When the bid does not name the mode o conveyance, it will be taken and understood to be for the lowest mode of conveyance, to wit, on horseback. When it proposes to carry according to the advertisement, and no mode of conveyance is stated for the route in the advertisement, it will be considered as offering only for horseback conveyance.

21. Since the passage of the act of March 3d 1845, a new description of bid has been received. It specifies no mode of conveyance, but engages to carry the mail with certainty, celerity, and security, using the terms of the law. These bids are called, from the manner in which they are designated on the books of the Department, "star bids." It has been decided, after mature consideration, that a bid proposing a specific mode of conveyance of as high a grade as two horse coach transportation is to be preferred to the star bid. The experience of the Department enables it to lay down the following rules, viz:

When the mail on the route is not so large as to require two-horse coach conveyances, a star bid, if the lowest, will be perferred to the specific bid.

22. When the mails are of such size and weight as to render it necessary or expedient, in reference to them alone, to provide two horse coach conveyance, the specific bid, though the highest, will be preferred to the star bid, to the extent of a moderate difference in the compensation, in case the difference is not such to interfere with the policy of the new law, which looks to a reduction in the cost of transportation. Exceptions, however, may be allowed, where the star bid is made by the present owner of the stock on the route, and it is manifest that the reasons for preferring the specific bid do not exist in his case.

23. On routes of the highest class, where four-horse coach or steamboat transportation is required by the size and importance of the mails, the preference for the specific bid will be, if necessary, carried to a greater extent of difference than on the inferior coach routes, subject, however, to the exceptions above stated.

24. A modification of a bid, in any of its essential terms, is tantamount to a new bid, and cannot be received, so as to interfere with regular competition, after the last hour set for receiving bids.

25. Postmasters are required to be careful and not to certify the sufficiency of guarantors or sureties without knowing that they are persons of sufficient responsibility; and all bidders, guarantors, and sureties are distinctly notified that on a failure to enter into or perform the contracts for the service proposed for in the accepted bids, their legal liabilities will be enforced against them.

26. The contracts will be substantially in the forms heretofore used in this Department, except in the respects paticularly mentioned in these instructions and conditions; and on all railroad and steamboat routes the contractors will be required to deliver the mails into the post offices at the ends of the routes and into all the post offices not more than eighty rods from the railroad or landing.

COUNCIL BLUFFS AGENCY FERRY.

THIS FERRY has now been in successful operation for two years, and given universal satisfaction to the emigrants and traveling public in general. It is the best crossing on the Missouri river. Proof—Not a dollar's worth of property has been lost at this Ferry, during the last two year's heavy emigration. It is the nearest route to Proof—The first overland emigrants that arrived at Sacramento this season, made the trip in fifty-five days from Council Bluffs. It is the healthiest route. Proof—Not a single case of Cholera has occurred on the north side of the Platte, whilst on the south side, this dreadful disease had spread gloom and desolation beyond the worst newspaper accounts that have been published. Some six hundred according to the best information we can obtain have died on that truly fatal route. Caused by the impurities in the water

FREMONT COUNTY, IOWA,
March 31st, 1851.

PRESIDENT HYDE:

DEAR SIR:—Yesterday I obtained a copy of the Frontier Guardian Extra, in which I found a letter from T Farmer, of this County, dissenting from the statements which I made at the Convention of the 14th inst., and he further states that he believes that there is no such understanding, and that the majority of the citizens will vouch for what he says, and he further believes that the Mormons were excited into a nomination of one of their Church by such declarations. Actions will speak louder than words.

I said in my speech at Kanesville that a majority of the citizens of this (Fremont) county believed if a Mormon Judge was elected that there would be difficulty, for there were people that would not abide the decisions of a Mormon Judge, no difference how correct they might be, and this would bring about difficulty; and when the matter was once commenced, in all probability it would result in the Mormons being driven from the country; for the State of Missouri skirted our Southern border, and a deep seated hatred exists in the breasts of some of the citizens of that State towards the Mormons, which would impel them at once to unite against the Mormons, should a difficulty be commenced.

Now Sir: I believe that nine-tenths of the citizens of Fremont County believed with me at that time, and many so expressed themselves to me, and desired that I should make these statements at the Convention. But Lo and behold! a sudden change has come over the spirit of Col. Farmer's dreams, and he thinks there is no such feeling existing as I told you of. As I told you then I tell you now, the want of frankness has got the Mormons into many difficulties. This is not the first time that I have got into disrepute for giving the facts in the case; but truth is mighty and will prevail.

Now, I do not say that Col. Farmer has made misstatements, (for he may have changed,) but his late course in this County led me to think him very inveterate towards the Mormons, for I believe he was the first man or at least among the first that I heard of opposing a man for an office because he was a Mormon. I recollect he opposed Milton Richards being appointed Assistant Marshall for this District last Spring, because he (Richards) was a Mormon; also, he ran against him for the District Clerkship last August; because he (Richards) was a Mormon. And in canvassing the County on being informed by David Study, Esq., of Plum Hollow, (who is a Mormon,) that they (the people of Plum Hollow,) had made up their minds to vote for Richards; he (Farmer) said, "this must be a religious body you have, and if the Mormons hang together this way, we wil have the Missourians upon them again," or words to this amount, as I have been credibly informed.

Now, there is one of three things which Mr. Farmer is chargable with; the first is, he may have changed, and if this is the case he must have changed since the Convention, for he was unwilling to go into the Convention because he believed the Mormons would select a candidate of their own; the second is, he may have forgotten his former expressions about difficulties with the Mormons, and if this is the case I should not be surprised if he had forgotten the letter he wrote to you, his memory would be so short; the third I shall not name, for it is so base that no high minded gentleman would not be guilty of it.

Now Sir, that you should be so easily deceived by such a letter as that of Col. Farmer's, is somewhat astonishing to me. Now, what better evidence would you want of Col. Farmer's opposition to the Mormons than his making use of those very arguments which your vilest enemies have used the most affectually against you as a people, namely, that you should not be allowed the privilege of electing a Judge because you are not permanent settlers, and the same argument holds good that you should not vote. And further, why is it that he is doing all he can to secure the election of the ANTI-Mormon candidate. What better evidence do you want of his (Farmer's) opposition to you as a people.

I have understood that he is circulating a petition certifying that what I stated was not true, but I hear that he can get but few signatures, and the latest accounts say he has abandoned the project.

Now Sir, I do this in all good feeling towards you and Mr. Farmer, but I do it in order to set myself right before you and the community. What I done I did from no other motive than to give you a true statement of the feelings of this community as I then believed them to be, and now I can produce any amount of testimony that all that I stated was true; my enemies themselves being judges. And now if difficulties do come (which I fear will be the case,) you cannot say that I did not warn you of it, although you may think me your enemy for so doing, but "a wise man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself."

Give this to the Public if you please.

Yours truly,

BENJAMIN RECTOR.

If men did but know what felicity dwells in the cottage of a virtuous man—how sound he sleeps, how quiet his breast, how composed his mind, how free from care, how easy his provisions, how healthy his morning; how sober his night, how moist his mouth, how joyful his heart—they would never admire the noises, the diseases, the throng of passions, and the violence of unnatural appetites, that fill the houses of the luxurious, and the hearts of the ambitious.—[Jeremy Taylor.

Omitting to do good, is to commit evil.

AUSTIN, April 3d, 1851.

To the Citizens of Pottawatamie County,

GREETING:—

Whereas, there have been false representations made to the citizens of Pottawatamie County, relative to the sentiments, feelings, and determinations of the people of Fremont County, in regard to a Mormon Judge should one be elected. Whereas, we are as a mass, a law abiding people, and would greatly lament an effort on the part of any man or party in our County, to resist the authority of an officer legally constituted. And whereas, we reverence, respect, and cherish the true principles of Republicanism, whereby all good citizens are declared to be entitled to equal rights, privileges and immunities. And furthermore, whereas we believe in the supremacy of the laws of the land and consequently reprobate Mobocracy or oppression in any or all of its hideous forms

Therefore, we the undersigned citizens of Fremont County, most respectfully represent and declare that the self stiled delegate from Fremont, Benjamin Rector, was not authorised or empowered by the citizens here either to call a Convention or to participate in its proceedings, — that the remarks and threats made by him in said Convention are without foundation as the sentiments of the mass of our citizens, and we deeply regret that such a course was persued by him, — that we acknowledge the right of a Mormon if elected to preside in this District, and will discountenance any attempt on the part of rash and inconsiderate men, to resist the execution of our laws,—that we deeply deplore the possibility of a difficulty in consequence of the election of a Mormon Judge. And we sincerely hope that this our friendly application or petition for the establishment of amicable feelings between the two counties, may be received in the same spirit with which it is prompted.

Humility is a flower that prospers most when planted on the rich soil of a noble mind.

Claims.

In almost every new Country, more or less difficulty is occasioned by the clashing interests of different claimants to tracts or parcels of the public lands. Our advice to all parties concerned is this; First and foremost, let no one jump another's claim, whether he be Jew or Gentile, Citizen or Foreigner. The custom of the Neighborhood, and the Statute law of the State make this subject so plain that any honest man can see it;—and none but a dishonest, selfish person will try to take advantage of his neighbor, contrary to the provisions of law. Our Bishop complains that some have jumped the land claims that he was sent to locate, after he had laid his foundations and marked them out. This will not be forgotten. Let those persons ask themselves this question: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Do not be more craving than the Gentiles? They do not trespass upon your claims that we have heard of; and you should be careful not to trespass upon theirs: and when they agree to submit any matter of dispute to the tribunals of our own Church, and agree to abide the issue, and any member of the Church, interested, declines this offer, it does not show honesty to very good advantage. We now say, that we shall use all moral and lawful means, consistent, to secure to every man his rights, as we ever have done; and in matters of dollars and cents, and the common rights of citizens, we shall regard all men as members of our Church; or in other words treat all alike; and if any man transgress the law, he must expect to answer for that transgression, not before us; but before the tribunals of the law. To cut this matter short. "Do unto others as you would that others do unto you." For whatsoever measure ye mete unto others, the same measure shall be meted unto you. The liberal man deviseth liberal things; and by his liberality shall he stand."

Wild Hogs.

Mr. Cornelius Dunham, residing on the Buoyer, about twenty miles above Gallands Grove, brought a large stock of Hogs with him when he settled there, and likewise a fine flock of sheep. He says that while he was sick, he found it difficult to get corn for his hogs, and they scattered off through the wild country; and are now scattered. He complains that hunters kill them for wild hogs, and people hunting land claims do the same, when there are no wild hogs in that section. The Indians drove off, in day light, between one and two hundred head of his sheep; but through great exertion, he got back all but about seventy. Mr. D. is posted far out on the border,—is an industrious and persevering man, to all appearance; and we believe, an honorable man. He wears cloth made from his own flock by the hands of his wife and daughters: and he takes it very unkind that his hogs are shot and killed for wild ones. It is known who killed some of them, and they had better be after settling with him, and pay over before they are made to feel the force and benefit of the law. Any person interested can call at this office and settle if they are inclined; or they may possibly be indicted before the next Grand Jury.

Any information respecting the whereabouts of Mr. Dunham's hogs, left with Robert Wimmer of Harris Grove—with Messrs. Cummings and Jordan of Galland's Grove, will be gratefully received by Mr. D.

The Printer's Ten Commandments.

1. Thou shalt love the Printer—for he is the standard of thy Country.

2. Thou shalt subscribe to his paper—for he seeketh much to obtain the news, of which you may remain ignorant.

3. Thou shalt pay him for his paper—he laboreth hard to give you the news in due season.

4. If a business man, thou shalt advertise that thus thy profits may enable thee not only to pay for thy paper, but "put money in thy purse."

5. Thou shalt not visit him, regardless of his office rules—in deranging the papers.

6. Thou shalt not touch any thing that would give the Printer trouble; that he may not hold thee guilty.

7. Thou shalt not read the manuscript in the hands of the Compositor—for he will not hold thee blameless.

8. Thou shalt not see the news before it is printed—for he will give it to you in due time.

9. Thou shalt ask him few questions of things in the office—from it, thou shalt tell nothing.

10. Thou shalt not at any time, send abusive and threatening letters to the editor, nor cowhide him more than five times a year.—[Gazette.

Have courage to discharge a debt while you have money—to do without that which you do not need—to speak your mind when it is necessary and hold your tongue when it is prudent that you should do so—to speak to a friend in a seedy coat, even though you are in company with one richly attired—to own you are poor and thus disarm poverty of its sharpest sting—to make a will and a just one—to "cut" the most agreeable acquaintance you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle. "A friend should bear with a friends infirmities but not with his vices"—to show our respect for honesty, in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited—to wear your old clothes until you can pay for new ones—to obey your conscience, at the risk of being rediculed by men — to wear thick boots in the winter, and insist upon your wives and daughters doing the same—to prefer comfort and propriety to fashion, in all things.

The U. S. Government has contracted to pay Mr. Snow $300,000 on the completion of a telegraphic line from the western borders of Missouri to the Pacific ocean. This will make western telegraph stock valuable and be a great means of throwing population and improvement along the route to California.

Tremendous Gale at New York.

NEW YORK, March 18—2 P. M.

The effect of the storm last night was severely felt on Staten Island. The woods along the shore were submerged by the heavy tide, which made a complete breach over it and several of the docks. The Health Officer's dock at Quarantine was much damaged. The new bulkhead recently built at Stapleton was partially washed away. Portions of a wrecked brig were carried high npon the beach. Vanderbelt's landing was also damaged by the heavy sea. Nearly all the vessels at anchor at Staten Island dragged their anchors considerably.

On the North and East rivers, the tide rose above the docks, and it is feared that some of the Collins steamers in the corner stream have received serious damage.

On the north side of the city, and in the vicinity of Rector, Albany, Washington, West and other streets, many families have been driven from their houses, and some compelled to take refuge in the station house. One family was rescued from a cellar in which they nearly lost their lives. Beds, bedding, and other articles may be seen floating about the docks, and altogether the scene is one which has never before been witnessed here by the eye of man.

On the Jersey coast much damage is feared, as the storm must have been in that quarter.

The steamer Alabama, due on Tuesday, has not arrived. The ship DeWitt Clinton, arrived from Liverpool, lost thirty-one passengers by ship fever. Forty now on board sick.

$300,000, being balance on Mexican Indemnity, was paid from the treasury to-day

Hamlet Jr's Soliloquy.

BY SHAKSPEARE JR.

To Chew, or not to Chew? that's the question:—
Whether 'tis nobler in the man to suffer
The filthy spittle of tobacco chewers;
Or, to take up arms against this foul habit,
And by exposing, shame them. To chew, to smoke
Aye more, to snuff. Let us say we'll end
This filthy practice, and cleanse our stinking breathe.
By tobacco tainted. 'Tis a consummation,
Devoutly to be wished. To chew—to smoke:—
To snuff;—perchance to spit. Aye there's the rub.
For in the gob of spit, what evils may come,
When we have ejected the monstrous quid,
Must give us pause.
There's the respect,
That makes tobacco chewing of so long life;
For who would bear the foul stains of spit,
The spattered carpet, cushions soiled,
The ruin of silken dresses, sofa's stained,
By ill-directed discharge of the nauseous juice,
And the anathema's of angry housewife provoked,
When he might his own quietus make
With a cleansed mouth.

That's the Talk.

The following article from the Fulton Telegraph corresponds exactly with our views of the subject. Go it Mr. Fulton, your inventive genuis will raise you to fame, if you are only fortunate enough to convert the people to your sentiments, we will give you our ☞.

County Paper.

Every one that has a purse and the interest of his County at heart, should be a warm and active supporter of his own County paper. It is certainly his interest to be such; for whatever adds to the moral light and prosperity of his county, contributes to his elevation in society and to the pecuniary advantages that surround him. That every paper does this in America, we cannot doubt. With Americans, the Press is the greatest lever, either morally, politically, religiously or commercially considered. It is that which has brought this nation so suddenly to the highest elevation of greatness and renown; if then the national press has united done this for the nation, surely a corresponding benefit has been and is conferred by each paper upon its immediate county or district.

Respect does not follow Extravagance.

The man who takes care of his earnings, is far more respected than he who squanders all in "riotous living." So with the young lady, although she may spend her last shilling in the purchase of a new dress or a costly shawl, and follow the whims of fashion so closely as does the fashionable belle who has thousonds at her disposal, she cannot make people believe she is richer than she really is; and is more likely to incur suspicion as to her rectitude of character, and to keep away such young men as make good husbands from her society, than if she lived prudently and dressed plainly.

Let Us Have Patience.

Only let us be content to stay the time, and not be thrusting in the sickle before the corn is half ripe. The husbandman, when he hath done his work in earing and sowing, doth not look to receive the precious fruits of the earth into his garners again the next day, or the next month; but he hath long patience; and whether it chance to be an early harvest or a late harvest he waiteth still and taketh the season as it falleth. Even so have we need of patience, that after we have done the will of God, and suffered according to the will of God, we may receive the promised reward; for in due time we shall reap, if we faint not. The final reward is sure—and when it cometh it will abundantly recompense all our work, yea, and our patience too.—[Sanderson.

Home Made Candles.

If you manufacture your own candles, immerse the wicks in lime water, in which a little niter—saltpeter—has been dissolved, and dry them before dipping. The light from such is much clearer, and the tallow will not "run." Especially if it is not more than half lard.—[Anon.

Nature is graceful; and affectation with all art, can never produce anything half so pleasing.

CONFIDENCE.

BY JOHN JAQUES.

Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle shall be put out with him. His confidence shall be rooted out of his tabernacle, and it shall bring him to the king of terrors.—Bildad.

In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence, and his children shall have a place of refuge.—Solomon.

Cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which have great recompence of reward.—Paul.

Confidence is the cement of society, deprived of which the whole social fabric would speedily fall into decay, and crumble to ruin.

Confidence, in a crisis, is salvation. It is strong as death, yet sensitive as the magnet. It can exist to diffuse its blessings only in peace. It dispenses with locks, bolts, bulwarks, and bayonets. It is expansive as eternity,—progressive in its character,—when cherished it gathers strength with age. It originates, plans, builds up, establishes, beautifies, adorns, exalts, delights in order, and upholds legal authorities. It is a living chain that stretches through eternity, and binds the creations in one, even a bond of brotherhood.

Happy the people where confidence reigns supreme, who fully confide in each other. Peace and prosperity attend them. They are one, undivided in aim and destiny. Their lives are calm as a summer eve: their spirits and actions are independent, unfettered, and free. The arts, sciences, and commerce flourish, enriching with their blessings. The virtues prevail with irresistible sway, and spread their genial influences around. The old men, with hoary heads, carry their staves in peace. Onward progress is sure—none can hinder. Humanity is on a rise to a station among the Gods.

When confidence disappears, green-eyed jealousy, cruel as the grave, assumes its place invariably, with dissimulation, envyings, confusion, strife, violence, wars, and murders rushing in its dark sinuous train.

Drive confidence from the family, the city, the nation, the institution, or the people, and their inevitable doom is written and sealed as by the finger of God, or the hand of fate.

The withdrawal of confidence brings evil surmisings; creates dissensions; levels distinctions; violates contracts; dishonors dignities; mocks order; despises governments; dethrones monarchs; breaks up kingdoms; dismembers empires; dissolves society; outrages humanity; chills the warmest feelings; withers the fondest hopes; checks the noblest aspirations; cools the loftiest desires; cramps the most splendid efforts; blights the most promising appearance; quenches the most sublime thoughts; destroys the brightest specimens of ingenuity, industry, and skill; converts the fair face of nature into a sterile wilderness; damns souls, and sends them to the lowest hell; ruins worlds, and sinks them into the deepest abyss of degradation, and perhaps burries them in oblivion.

Cursed the nation, people, or world, whose confidence is thoroughly destroyed. Cursed are they with a bitter, a grievious, a devouring curse. Their course is downward; deeper and deeper still. Fearful their state and condition. Awful the effects of their apostacy. Terrible falling away. A reign of Terror. An era of blood. Father arrayed against son; mother against daughter; brother against brother; sister against sister; friend against friend; every man's hand against his neighbor; the earth fadeth; the haughty people languish; the mirth of tabrets ceaseth; the song and dance are known no more; the beautiful gardens lie waste; the fruitful fields are very deserts; the strong palaces are thrown down; distrust, suspicion, paleness, terror, and a certain fearful looking-for are manifest; the sun is clothed with blackness; the moon with blood; the stars fall from the firmament; the earth reeleth and quaketh at the rolling thunders of the artillery of heaven; the lightning glare revealeth the darkness, desolation, destruction, and consumption decreed when the good spirit ceased to "strive with man." If the righteous are to be caught up into the air, and their works do follow them, truly might the Savior ask, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith (confidence) upon the earth?"

In view of these things, shall not the Saints of the Latter-day increase their faith and confidence, that they may with approval pass their probation, creditably enter upon their third estate, and individually receive, at the general convention of worlds, the rewarding mandate of their God—"Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?"

Shall we not respect, honor, and obey the constituted authorities of the kingdom, adhere to their counsels, and abide in the laws of Jehovah? Is not the confidence of our brethren and sisters dear to us as life? Ought it not to be carefully cultivated, rigidly watched, and guarded from inroad, so that we may breathe a healthy moral atmosphere favorable for the formation, growth and developement untainted of the generous virtues, better feelings, and fullest capabilities of our being?

Shall this beautiful world of ours be annihilated? So admirably adapted as it is to meet our wants and necessities; with its wondrous capacities for producing sustenance, comfort, pleasure, and endless gratification, to our perceptive powers, and organs, with its matchless organization; its perfect and harmonious complement of animal and vegetable life; its inviting livery; its glorious canopy, studded as it were with glittering gems of dazzling brightness; its vast undulating plains, and gently rising hills carpeted with living green, decorated with delightful flowers of every imaginable form and species, dressed in a thousand captivating varieties of hue, shade, and color, exhaling on every hand the sweetest perfume and odor,—shall such a world as this become, and for ever remain, an unsightly heap of dust and ashes! Shall nothing remain of this magnificent creation but a vast wild chaos of material, with the ignoble record in the Eternal Archives that it brought forth—a worthless race deserving of celestial power, rest, and glory? The answer has been given. Blessed be God — our fathers, through their confidence in Him and each other, have obtained promises of resurrecting power for themselves, their faithful children, and their mother earth.

Shall we then be backward in proving our lineage to these ancient worthies, and consequently our title to a participation in their heritage and promises? Hath not the great God spoken in this age? Hath He not set up his kingdom? Shall it ever more be thrown down? Is not this the dispensation of the fulness of times? Will not all things be gathered in one? Are not these the times of restitution? Are not these times of proving and choosing? Are not power, spirit, and priesthood, now upon the earth? Shall we not love and confide in our God, our brethren, and our sisters, that we may be one in all things, that we may escape all things that shall come to pass, and be accounted worthy to stand at the coming of the Son of Man? Let every man as far as he is concerned, answer for himself.

Do we not Live in the Last Days!

The above question is an important one; and no observing or reflecting mind can prevent it from occupying an important place in the regions of thought and meditation. The changes and revolutions now transpiring in foreign countries, and the unsettled and restless condition of our own, together with the plagues and pestilence that visit every country and waste the inhabitants among all nations—the explosions and disasters upon the waters, multiplying with fearful strides,—theft, robbery and murder increasing throughout the land—Incendiarism, tempests, fire and floods, sweeping in their destructive course, the finest specimens of nature and art into the general mass of devastation and ruin, too clearly and fearfully declare, in language not easily misconstrued, that the natural, moral and political elements are being troubled by an Invisible Hand. The bonds of Union are becoming like the spider's web around the giant—the axe is being laid at the root of confidence; and true and faithful friends and alliances have become like angel's visits,—"few and far between."

Why all this confusion, distrust, misery and woe! Because the "Angel of the Covenant" has poured out his vial upon the elements, and its contents are scattered every where, like the hoar frosts of winter; though invisible to the vulgar eye, yet the eye that is single not only marks its effects but comprehends the cause. Under its effects the nations are jealous, the people foolish and angry, the atmosphere charged with plague and disease, while folly and madness go unrebuked. "They are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger but not with strong drink." The nations reel to and fro like a drunken man, and they know not what ails them. The very spirits from the unseen or spiritual world are disturbed! Unauthorized, they come to man and contribute their share towards swelling the confusion and excitement that are destined to cover the earth. They 're long will prophecy—call fire down from heaven, work miracles, and gather the kings and their armies to the great battle. These hosts of the high ones, will be punished on high, and the kings of the earth, punished upon the earth. We are rapidly merging into the last days, and we shall be compelled to witness the scenes thereof; and are all these things to be done, and the Most High have no confidential friend or prophet on earth through whom he can kindly whisper these important events to those who seek to serve Him with all their hearts? Paul said to his friends; "ye are not in the dark so that that day should overtake you as a thief. While the unbelief of the world will not allow of any further revelation, the day of the Lord, with all its majesty, sublimity and awful grandeur, will overtake the world as a thief in the night. Arise ye virgins, and go ye out to meet the Bridegroom. The foolish ones who have been thrown off their guard by Strang, Brewster, & Co., may find themselves without light, and also without the material (Oil,) to produce light.

The Saints should watch and pray, and thereby lay up in store a good foundation against the day that will try men's souls: for they will deceive, if it were possible, even the very elect. Strange things, fearful sights and signs in the heavens, and on the earth will appear, and men's hearts will fail them for fear of those things that are coming on the earth; and even the powers of the "Spirit World" will be shaken, and Satan come down having great wrath and power, knowing his time so be short. We shall not be called to wrestle with flesh and blood; but with principalities and powers, with spiritual wickedness in high places. Arm yourselves for the contest, for behold and lo! it cometh, and the last days are soon upon us with all their wonders and strange events.

Important Resolutions and Decisions of the High Council.

At the last session of this body on Saturday last, it was resolved, on motion of Elder Hyde, that the Bishop, Wm. W. Lane, and his assistants, are authorized and empowered to settle all matters of difference arising between members of the Church on account of business transactions, wherein dollars and cents are concerned, or property of value of any kind: Provided always, that the parties are not debarred the privilege of resorting to the legal tribunals of the land for adjustment of their difficulties: Yet the Council, advise and recommend all concerned, to avoid the tribunals of the law by living above them, and also the tribunals of the Church in the same way.

Resolved further: that wherever the marriage covenant is violated, and husband and wife separate, evidence of evil and depravity become too apparent to allow the parties to remain in fellowship in the Church; particularly the party found most in the fault. The most guilty party must give up the children (if any,) to the other party, or allow them to be bound out according to law, to a third party; and the party most guilty, forfeits his or her membership in the Church, and likewise, all claim to a support from the Church. Any member marrying this excluded party, must be excluded also. He or she who lightly esteems the marriage covenant is on the downward road to ruin. Remove the sanctity of this institution, and the moral structure of society is prostrated, and becomes like the rose, lovely and beautiful in its natural form, but disgusting when rolled in the mire of the streets. The officers of the Church are required to observe these items, and to make them the rule of their action in cases that may arise, or that may now exist, of a character that will justify their application. The Council gave their most unqualified disapprobation to any violation of the marriage covenant, or to any infraction thereof; and were resolved to hold neither male or female in fellowship that will consent to separate contrary to the laws of the land, or to the usages of good society.

Attention.

The United States' Mail now runs regularly, once a month, to and from the City of the Great Salt Lake. Letters mailed in any part of the Union, and directed to that City, will go directly there. This affords every facility for the conveyance of letters, necessary: and freight teams will leave from the 20th inst., to the first of June. After the first day of June, there will probably be little or no crossing the River with a view to proceed over the plains. Any person wishing to send parcels to their friends, should send them by the freight trains, and their letters by the Mail.

We expect to start for the Valley about the first of June, to go by express; and we cannot take parcels for any one, neither letters. We intend to go as light as possible, that we may glide swiftly across the plains and back again before frost, if possible. Do not ask us therefore to take letters or parcels, for we cannot do it, when there are so many other opportunities, more suitable and proper.

Salt Lake Mail.

We learn from a reliable source that the Salt Lake Mail had not arrived at Fort Kearney on the 25th ult. The grass on the Plains two hundred miles west of Fort Kearney, is farther advanced than on this side of the river.

Emigrants may be safe to start by the 20th inst.

The Indians are perfectly tranquil,—plenty of Buffalo within one day's travel of the aforesaid Fort.

To the Point.

On our first page will be seen a letter from Hon. Benjamin Rector of Fremont; and likewise a communication from many of the first citizens of that County, contradicting the views of that gentleman. We have no comments to make upon them, but simply state that no desire or intention is cherished here to violate the law, or to grasp anything that comes not within the limits of our lawful and constitutional rights.

Time will determine whether the subsequent conduct of the citizens of Fremont will do Mr. Rector the honor of making him a true prophet, or whether they possess salt enough to save their County from the disgrace of resisting a legally qualified and authorized officer in the discharge of the duties of his station. It is our opinion that they do.

Northward, the Tide of Empire Flows.

From the flattering accounts we have from the Little Sioux, Soldier, and Boyer rivers at the north of us, we are almost persuaded to weigh anchor from Kanesville, and draw off northward where there is more health, more timber, more game and a soil equally good.

New settlers would do well to go up north, and about one half the old settlers. The Country is open, and strongly invites men of industry and enterprize to go there and make for themselves houses and homes. We would say that we intend to go up north and settle there, if it were not for the fact that some would say, Br. Hyde only says so to get us to go there and settle the country. Br. Hyde will soon show you where he will be. Our motto is, if you cannot go west, go north, after selling your rich and valuable claims farther south and on the Missouri Bottoms. Americans may settle on the Missouri Bottoms and enjoy good health; but foreigners who have not been acclimated to this country, have no business on the Missouri Bottoms.

The Guilty will not Relish This!

Persons who have taken into their possession any stray animal,—horse, ox, cow, pig, sheep, or any other animal, and have not advertized the same according to law, may expect to be prosecuted and receive the full virtue and merits of that law which they have violated. We have published the law upon this subject long ago: and if selfishness reigns strong enough to induce people to evade a compliance with the just requisitions of the law, they must expect to suffer the penalty of its violation.

Those who are friendly to order and good usages, will please give information to the prosecuting attorney, if they know where there are, or have been any stray animals taken into custody or possession by any body, and have neglected to advertise or post the same according to law.

Mr. John T. Caine.

The above named gentleman is our general agent at St. Louis, Mo., for the Guardian. He receives the papers from the Post Office, pays the postage, and then charges the postage to the subscribers. He takes the papers from the Post Office in packages of fifty each, and often takes them to the public meetings on Sundays for distribution This is much more convenient for many subscribers than to call themselves at the office on a Sunday, when it may be shut up.

Some, through the want of a proper understanding, have supposed that Br. Caine was taxing them unjustly for the postage on their papers. But it is through kindness, to accommodate the subscribers, that he does it: and the subscribers ought to reward him with something better than murmurings for his labors of love and good-will, and we are confident they will do so, after learning the facts in the case.

Br. Caine is a commercial man; and pretty generally posted up with regard to a knowledge of the markets, &c. He will be of essential service to our emigrants, and to business men in the country and likewise to passing or transient customers who may wish to make purchases in St. Louis. He may be found by calling at Number 152 Market Street.

Election.

The first Monday in April, inst., was the most disagreeable and stormy day, that we have ever witnessed in this country. It began to rain on Sunday night, and continued to rain incessantly until about 12 o'clock on Monday; then it snowed and froze severely; and consequently we had a very light vote to what would have been given if the day had been fine; yet unfavorable as the day was, quite a goodly number turned out at the election, the final result of which is officially given below.

Hard Bread.

Our readers are directed to the advertisement of Mr. Mitchell in another place. We have been presented with a box of his hard bread; and having crossed the Plains ourself last year, we know, from actual experience that Mr. M's. Hard Bread is just the article to take. No Emigrant should go without, at least, some of it. It is the best article of the kind, ever offered in this market.

Who Will do Likewise!

Mr. Hicks went below a few days since and returned, bringing us the cash for three subscribers. Suppose every person, interested for the success of our office and cause, should get the same number of subscribers; how soon would the Guardian double its circulation! And how much good a person might do in this way, who would not be able to advance the cause in any other way! Friends at home and abroad, think of these things, and act accordingly.

There are men who have obtained upwards of three hundred subscribers for us! This is the right way. Small streams add to the main current as well as greater ones. We are thankful "for small favors, and greater ones in proportion"

Cash.

Who has a little of the above article lying by them, that will consent to deposit the same with us for circulation and good use, rather than let it remain where it does no one any good? We will repay on demand.

For the Guardian.

Mr. Editor:

Why is it that men will drive cattle off their range, and keep them a year or so, without advertising them according to law? Others keep estrays all winter without saying a single word about them. The public are anxious to know if this course is resorted to, to save the real owners of cattle the expense of advertising, or, otherwise, to keep the matter covered so that they may not know where their cattle are.

Please answer in your next.

Yours, &c., GOUGER.

The proper persons to answer the foregoing interrogations are those concerned in the aforesaid traffic; but the estray law is very explicit upon the subject—we published it in our paper twelve months ago, (see No. 22, Vol. 1,) therefore, we think those who have indulged in covering up such matters, can have no cloak to screen them from the law, neither shall they have from the public eye.

If there are individuals who are so exceedingly selfish, and dishonest, as to try to hide at noon day, the property of others, under a cover of ignorance of law; the law ought to take hold of such, and bring them out to public view, and make them "feel" if their vision have become so dark to honesty and honor as Mr. Gouger's article represents.

Ignorance and design have ever been the mother of mystery, and all who love them are no better than they. The Old Lady must either sooner, or later yield to the Sun of Righteousness, whose penetrating rays bring to light, and to public view, the secret works of darkness and of night. Children of the light should walk in the light, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, which in their final issue lead to exposure, ignominy and shame.

We have repeatedly advised our friends in this County to take the Guardian which contains at times, and seasons the necessary information for avoiding such difficulties.

Hon. A. C. Dodge will please accept our thanks for public documents from Washington City.

Bridge over the Platte.—The emigrants who propose to take up their line of march, this spring, over the Plains to California, will be glad to learn that a bridge has been built on the north fork of the Platte river, and shops for their accommodation established there.

From the Millennial Star, March 1st.

Death of Elder James H. Flanigan.

It becomes our painful duty to record the death of Elder Flanigan, late President of the Birmingham Conference. His faithful and efficient labors, in that and in the Bedfordshire Conference, characterized by dignified, but unostentatious deportment, had powerfully attached the affections of thousands to his person. His life strictly illustrating his faith, enabled him with great boldness, and power, to proclaim "this Gospel and Kingdom." God was indeed manifest in his ministrations, as the prosperity of the work under his presidency abundantly testifies. His integrity in the cause of truth, was well evinced by his undeviating course in the path which duty defined, regardless of human frown or favor. His pen, like the barbed arrow, was pointed against the falsifiers of truth, and, although pungent with reproof, his communications disclosed true charity for those to whom they were addressed. His unremitting assiduity declared a holy zeal, worthy his High Calling.

It is seldom our lot to chronicle the death of a more useful and promising man, than was Brother Flanigan. Besides his labors in his native land he has spent two years in the ministry of the everlasting Gospel in this nation. Being only 29 years of age, his brethren had much to hope for in the prospect of his aid to spread the Gospel among the nations on earth. But God, in whose hands our breath is, had otherwise determined; and, as He frequently does to his ministers, showed to this our brother the position he was to occupy in his future state, which so fascinated his mind that he frequently besought the Elders present to ask for his release; how different this from the feelings of those who are under bondage through the fear of death. After teaching his people how to live,—he taught them how to die.

It would have been highly gratifying, could we have participated with our brethren from the various conferences in the funeral obsequies of the deceased; but an unusual pressure of business at that particular juncture, prevented. We most heartily respond to their suggestion, that a becoming and appropriate monument be erected over his grave, to perpetuate the memory of the beloved dead; and will endeavor to bestow the attention upon the subject which they request.

Emigrants over the Plains,

Can register their names at this Office, have the same inserted in the Guardian, and a copy of the paper nicely done up and mailed to their friends whom they have left behind, for one dime each.

In the event of T. Butler King being elected United States Senator, from California, in the place of Fremont, of which there is a strong probability, the Honorable George Evans, of Maine, it is said, will be appointed Collector of San Francisco, in his stead.

Congress has determined to build an Asylum for invalid soldiers. Mount Vernon, Washington's resting place, has been spoken of as a peculiarly appropriate place. But there is no doubt that Jefferson Barracks, or some of the beautiful sites on the Mississippi near St. Louis, would be more central and accessible.

The wheat crop of the last season, in the Salt Lake Valley is estimated at from 500,100 to 1,500,000 bushels.

Winter in Oregon.—The weather in Oregon during the past winter, is represented as having remarkably mild.

Kanesville, April 14, 1851.

Hon. John M. Bernhisel:

Dear Sir—In consideration of your recent services so efficiently rendered favorable to the interests of Utah, (with which interests, ours are closely identified,) and the fidelity with which you have discharged your duty as Delegate from Deseret, and wishing in some small measure to show the respect and esteem, your labors merit, we tender you a "Complimentary Supper," on Saturday evening, the 19th inst., at 7 o'clock, at Elder Hyde's New Hall, on Hyde street.

In behalf of the citizens of Kanesville,

David Candland, Chas. H. Bassett, John Gooch, Jr., Thos. McKenzie, Francis A. Brown, Abraham Chadwick, Jacob G. Bigler. } Committee of Arrangm'ts

Kanesville, Iowa, April 14, 1851.

Gentlemen,—I tender to you my grateful acknowledgments for the honor you have conferred upon me by the offer of a Public Supper to be given on Saturday evening, next; and while I accept with pleasure the invitation, I cannot with-hold the expression of my feelings for such a testimonial of regard from the citizens of this flourishing village.

I thank you also for the favorable terms in which you have been pleased to allude to my services in behalf of our newly organized Territory. These, I am very sensible, have few claims to consideration, but such as are derived from your kind partiality.

With sentiments of great respect,

I have the honor to be,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN M. BERNHISEL.

To David Candland, Chas. H. Bassett, John Gooch, Jr., Thomas McKenzie, Francis A. Brown, Jacob Bigler, Abram Chadwick, Esqs., Committee.

For the Guardian.

Friendship.

Friendship's a name to few confined,
The offspring of a noble mind;
A generous warmth that fills the breast,
'Tis better felt than e'er expressed.

Who are our Friends?

Jesus said, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatever I command you."

How is it many profess to be our friends, and call on us to counsel and advise them in matters pertaining to the kingdom of God; and then act contrary to that advice, and thus show a contempt to our counsel, and but too frequently bring upon themselves disgrace, disfellowship, and disunion from the Church of God, and a loss of the spirit of truth whereby they were sanctified.

Now dear brethren if you are our friends, and seek to build up the kingdom of God, beware how you trifle with the powers and authorities of the Holy Priesthood, and let wisdom, prudence, and the spirit of truth direct all your acts.

Let true unsullied friendship warm your hearts into a love of virtue, works of righteousness, and an obedience to the law of God, and then the God and Father of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, will bless and sanctify you wholly. Even so Amen.

EVERMONT.

Warning.

Let no lone female, who claims to be a member of our Church, accept any and every offer that may be made to her to cross the Plains. Unless they can have opportunities to go with respectable and responsible families, where their name and character may be placed beyond the reach of suspicion; and that which is most sacred and dear to every female, be preserved without reproach; better stay in Pottawatamie county until the resurrection of the dead, than place your all at the mercy of a stranger, or to an untried or unproven man. Our garments are clean, having given this warning; and if some parents were a little more cautious about their daughters promenading the streets and other places at a late hour at night, they would be less liable to mortification and shame than they now are.

Samll Pox among the Sioux Indians.

We learn from Mr. Martin, directly down from the borders of the Sioux Country, that the small pox is making fearful havoc among these Indians. On Medicine Creek, at Fort Pierre, and at other places, they are dying off at a fearful rate. About five hundred of them are believed to have died within the last few weeks, and the malady is still raging among them.

We learn that the fur boats are about starting off down the river, and will be very apt to scatter the contagion along the banks. Our citizens should be cautious, and have as little intercourse with them as possible, inviting them to pass us by with little compliment.

Information Wanted.

Dr. Luke Johnson, Assistant Marshal, to take the Census of Pottawatamie county, made his returns in due time to Hon. Stephen B. Shelledy, but has received no official acknowledgment of the same from the Chief Marshall, neither has he received any portion of the pay for his services, though he has written to the Marshall upon the subject to our knowledge long enough ago to have received a reply. He is in need of his pay after having rendered the service; and if there was any defect in the performance of the duties assigned him, as a reason for this silence and neglect to forward him his pay, he considers it his due to have been apprised of it before this time. Have the mails been robbed, or has the Marshal neglected to write him and to forward him the funds as requested. Information upon this subject is what the deputy marshall seeks; and having failed to obtain any through private correspondence, he seeks a more public way of obtaining the desired information.

The Frontier Guardian.

FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 1851.

Late From California.

The following is a synopsis of the news from California brought by the arrivals at New York of the steamers Crescent City and Ohio.

NEW YORK, March 22.

The Crescent City, with two weeks later advices from California arrived here yesterday at 2 P. M. She left Chagres on the 11th and brings about $118,000 as freight.

The Falcon Clyde and Prometheus were anchored off Chagres. The Philadelphia had left for New Orleans on the 11th. The Crescent City left Kingston on the 14th, and the royal mail steamer Conway arrived there from St. Thomas, and sailed for Vera Cruz the same day.

On the Crescent are Philip Stillman, Mathew White, William Billings and F. B. Putnam, Secretary of the Panama railroad. The Crescent brings no mail, and has over a million of gold dust.

Monday the 15th was the day fixed for the election of U. S. Senator.

The Legislature is making efforts to raise funds and troops to suppress the Indian difficulties. Authority has been given to raise a volunteer force, to be used in case of need.

The weather continues dry and warm, and fears are expressed that there would be no more rain, which would be a serious loss to the diggers.

The health of the State was never better, with few deaths occurring. The gold Bluff excitement has greatly diminish. Expeditions to the Colorado were progressing. There was less talk about the Squatter question, and the State laws have been found inadequate to some localities, and the people have been dispensing justice under the code of Judge Lynch.

The Loan bill for $500,003 has passed the Legislature

Col. Fremont's popularity for Senator was daily increasing.

Divorce laws were occupying the attention of the Legislature and the people—the feeling being much averse to divorces.

The herds of gamblers were dispersing, as business was nearly gone.

Business matters were reviving, notwithstanding the bad weather. The accounts from the mines were encouraging; Limath, Scott's River, and other placers in the extreme north, seem to be most rich, and the miners there are doing well.

The Isthmus and Oregon had reached Panama, the former with 300 passengers and the latter with 140. The Oregon beat the Isthmus seven days.

Late advices from Oregon report the Legislature as having located the capitol at Salem. The weather there was stormy. The Oregonian has been severely handling Mr. Strong, from the Sandwich Islands.

A party of thirteen, supposed in the Empire City on her last trip, were murdered while crossing the Isthmus, by a band of Carthagenians and negroes (Among the murdered were two ladies and three children.) The murderers had been arrested and confessed their guilt.

The Ohio from Chagres, with a California mail and 150 passengers, and $300,000 in gold arrived to-day.

Further News From California.

The North America brings two hundred and twenty passengers.

The U. S. Sloop of War Albany, arrived at Chagres 22d ult.

The choice of Senator was between Col. Fremont and Butler King; the election was to take place in two or three days; it was thought that Col. Fremont was gaining ground.

The steamer John Tompkins from Sacremento for San Francisco, burst her boiler on the 31st January, killed the second engineer and scalding several others.

Much sickness prevails on the Isthmus, but it is not of malignant character.

The scarcity of rain materially embarrassed operations in the dry diggings; the miners, thus far, have occupied themselves in throwing up dirt, ready to take advantage of the first rain; it is said that a few days of rain will enable them to collect an immense amount of gold, which being immediately thrown into the hands of traders, will give credit to the miners for stores, and have the effect at once of reviving business throughout the country. Improvements were daily on the increase.

The gold diggings on the Youba have been very successful.

The people of San Jose, notwithstanding the vote in the Senate, have an idea of giving up the removal of the seat of government from that place.

Business at Sacremento City was excessively dull, but a good trade was anticipated in the spring.

Dates from the Sandwich Islands are to the 2d January. There is no news of importance. A post has been established at Honolulu, under the late postage treaty with the United States.

Postmasters and Publishers.

We give below an extract from a letter received from the Postmaster General, in answer to a letter of inquiry whether postmasters have the privilege of franking letters to publishers containing a remittance for subscription.

All postmasters whose compensation does not exceed $200 a year are privileged to send and receive, free, all letters written by themselves, and all written communications on their own private business, not weighing over half an ounce.

Postmasters who have the privilege of franking these private written communications can frank letters to publishers of newspapers, covering money for subscriptions, or the names of subscribers, as agent for the publisher, and his agency will be presumed from the fact that he franks them.

NATHAN K. HALL,
Postmaster General.

The man who tried to do business without advertising, and the man who never took a news paper, started last week for California. They go around the Horn in a salt kettle.

The Washington Globe has been suspended by Mr. John C. Rives until the next session of Congress, when it will be resumed for the publication of the debates. It will then continue neutrel in politics.

The City of Boston.

The Boston Transcript of Tuesday says:

Much has been said of late of the diversion of southern trade from Boston, in consequence of the spirit of resistance manifested in this city to the laws of the United States, protecting the citizens of the South in their constitutional rights. Intelligent judges are of the opinion that there will be a difference of from one to three millions in the trade of the city, the present season, in consequence of these manifestations.

DIED IN JAIL.—John J. Bradley, died in jail in Boston, last week, where he was confined for debt. He was imprisoned on the affidavit of Thomas Britton, the creditor, that Bradley the debtor, was about to leave the State. He was imprisoned on the 10th and died the 20th—he begged and prayed Britton not to arrest him and put him in jail. A coronor's jury returned a verdict, that Bradley died of consumption, hastened by his confinement in jail by Britton—that during his confinement Britton was informed of his situation, but refused to release him.

The deceased was forty years old, nearly six feet high and so emaciated that his weight did not exceed eighty pounds—he was liberally educated, had once been worth property, but by a reverse of fortune had become embarrassed. This statement is taken from the Boston Journal, and if all the truth, that Mr. Britton will probably hereafter call for a drop of water to cool his tongue—and call in vain.

West India Mails.

Arrangements have been made by Major Hobbie, with the British Consul at Havana, by which he will forward, by English steamers, letters from this country to any part of the West India Islands. These letters can go to Havana by Chagres mail steamers.

BOSTON, April 1.

Indictments against Wright, Scott, Hayes, and others, who were concerned in the rescue of the fugitive slave Shadrack, were read in the U. S. District Court, by Judge Sprague, this morning; the indictment against Wright contains 15 counts. The trial is fixed for this day 4 weeks.

Returned Californians.

The steamer Pawnee arrived yesterday from New Orleans, having on board some 400 returned Californians. They bring about $25,000, in money, which is principally divided among a few lucky hombres. As is generally the case, some had hardly enough to bring them home, and others had to depend upon their comrades to pay their passage hence.

Sunk.

The officers of the El Passo report the Steamboat Anthony Wayne sunk a few miles below Liberty landing. She had but little freight on board, the boat will probably be a total loss, after saving the engines, boilers and cabin furniture.—[St. Joseph Adventure.

From the Pittsburg Gazette, 26th.

THE LOSS OF THE LOWELL.—We yesterday received, from a gentleman who was present at this dreadful scene, an account of the collision between the Lowell and S. F. Vinton, both of which were, at the time, very heavily laden. The accident, took place near Captina Island, below Wheeling, at about half-past ten o'clock, P. M., and the night was very dark. The pilots of the boats perceived each other, and the bells were tapped, though owing to some unfortunate mistake or accident, the Lowell ran across the bow of the Vinton, which struck her aft of the boilers. The force of the collision was tremendnous; the Vinton being a large boat carrying a cargo of upwards of nine hundred tons, and having probably the strongest hull on the river. The Lowell sank in about thirty seconds after the collission the cabin parting from the hull and floating.

The cabin passengers and the crew escaped—many of them in their night clothes—to the top of the hurricane deck: but the first engineer, two firemen, and twelve deck passengers were drowned. The names of the firemen and deck passengers are unknown, they having been taken on board at Pittsburg, and the clerk not having entered their names upon the register.

A large family, consisting of a man, and his wife, and children, from Bedford, Pa., on their way to the West, were among the number of those drowned.

The captain of the Vinton at once ordered his boat to be stopped, and towed the wreck of the Lowell's cabin to the shore, where every thing that could contribute to the comfort of those who were saved, was done. After the lapse of some time, the Messenger No. 2 came alongside, and Captain Fisher kindly took a number of the passengers on his fine boat to Cincinnati.

Mr. Joseph B. McKown, the first engineer, who was drowned, leaves a wife and seven children, who reside in Allegheny, to lament his loss. He was not the regular engineer, but had taken the place of Edward B. Barton, who was attacked by a sudden illness, just as the Lowell was backing out from the wharf at Pittsburgh. His loss will be deeply lamented by his brother engineers, among whom he occupied a high position.

Mr. David Evans, the carpenter, and part owner of the boat, had a very narrow escape.

The cabin soon sank to the hurricane deck, and Mr Evans was caught underneath it. He managed to make his situation known, however to those on the top of the deck, by knocking against it, upon which a hole was cut through, and he was rescued, though he had been so long in the water he was nearly chilled to death.

Mr. Harrison Mason, the clerk, who owned three-eights of the vessel, was insured for twelve hundred dollars in the Citizens' Insurance Company. Mr. Edward B. Barton, who owned one-eighth, had an insurance of five-hundred dollars, on his share, in the Western Company. Captain Force, and Messrs. Rogers and Evans, the remaining owners of the Lowell, had no insurance.

Benefit your friends that they may love you more dearly still; benefit your enemies that they may at least become your friends.

POETRY.

For the Guardian.

A Paraphrase.

EZEKIEL 37th CHAPTER.

BY ALFRED CORDON.

The hand of God it rested down,
And caused my eyes to see,
A Valley that was full of bones,
Which seemed quite strange to me.

The bones lay scatter'd all around,
Quite numberless and dry;
While gazing on the lonely scene,
A voice came from the sky.

Can these bones live, Oh, Son of man?
Thou knowest Oh Lord said I;
Thy powerful arm can raise them up,
In glorious majesty.

I did as he commanded me,
And Lo, the bones did shake;
Bone came together to its bone,
Which caused the earth to quake.

The sinews and the flesh appear'd.
The skin it covered them;
But still the breath of life they lack'd,
To make them living men.

Again the Lord said prophecy,
And bid the winds come forth;
And breathe upon these lifeless forms,
And raise them from the earth.

The Priesthood's power again I tried,
But mark what scenes transpired;
A mighty army started forth,
Their souls with ardour fired.

Then they rejoiced, they knew their God,
And own'd his mighty hand;
His promises were verified,
He placed them in their land.

Therefore ye nations cease your strife,
Old Israel shall be free;
And worship God in their own land,
Through all eternity.

MISCELLANY.

Last Hours of a Single Gentleman.

This morning, November 11th, at half past evelen o'clack precisely, an unfortunate young man, Mr. Edward Pickney, underwent the extreme penalty of infatuation, by expiating his attachment to Mary Ann Gale, in front of the altar-railings of St. Mary's Church, Islington.

It will be in the recollection of all those friends of the parties who were at Jones' party at Brixton, two years ago, that Mr. Pickney was there and then first introduced to Mary Gale, to whom he instantly began to direct particular attentions, dancing with her no less than six sets that evening, and handing her things at supper in the most devoted manner. From that period commenced the intimacy between them which terminated in this morning's catastrophe.

Poor Pickney had barely attained his twenty-eighth year; but there is no belief that but for reasons of a pecuniary nature his single life would have come earliar to an untimely end. A change for the better, however, having occurred in his circumstances, the young lady's friends were induced to sanction his addresses, and thus become accessories to the cause for which he has just suffered.

The unhappy man passed his last night of bachelor existence in his solitary chamber. From half past eight to ten he was engaged in writing letters. Shortly after his younger brother, Henry, knocked at the door, when the doomed youth told him to come in. On being asked when he meant to go to bed, he replied—"Not yet." The question was then put to him how he thought he would sleep? to which he answered—"I don't know." He then expressed his desire for a cigar and a glass of grog. His brother, who sat down and partook of the like refreshments, now demanded if he would take any thing more that night. He said "nothing," in a firm voice. His affectionate brother then rose to take leave, when the devoted one considerately advised him to take of himself.

Precisely at a quarter of a minute to seven the next morning, the victim of Cupid having been called, according to his desire, he rose and promptly dressed himself. He had the self-control to shave himself without the slightest injury; for not even a scratch upon his chin appeared after the operation. It would seem that he had devoted a longer time than usual at his toilet.

The wretched man was attired in a light blue dress-coat, with frosted buttoms, a white vest and nankeen trowsers, with patent leather boots. He wore around his neck a variegated satin scarf, which partly concealed the Corrazzo of the bosom. In front of the scraf was inserted a breast-pin of conspicuous dimensions.

Having descended the staircase with a quick step he entered the apartment where his brother and a few friends awaited him. He then shook hands cordially with all present; and on being asked how he slept answered—"Very well;" and to the further demand as to the state of his mind, he said that he "felt happy."

One of the party hereupon suggested that it would be as well to take something before the melancholy ceremony was gone through, he exclaimed with some emphasis, "decidedly." Breakfast was accordingly served, when he ate a French roll, a large round toast, two sausages, and three new laid eggs, which he washed down with three great breakfast cups of tea. In reply to an expression of astonishment, on the part of persons present, he declared that he had never felt heartier in his life.

Having inquired the time, and ascertained that it was ten minutes to eleven, he remarked that it would soon be over. His brother then inquired if he could do anything for him; when he said he would take a glass of ale. Having drank this he appeared to be satisfied.

The fatal moment now approaching, he devoted the remaining portion of his time to distributing those little articles he would no longer want. To one he gave his cigar case, to another his tobacco stopper, and he charged his brother Henry with his latch key, with instructions to deliver it after all was over, with due solemnity to the landlady.

The clock at length struck eleven, and at the same moment he was informed that a cab was at the door. He merely said—"I am ready," and allowed himself to be conducted to the vehicle, into which he got with his brother, his friends following on behind in others.

Arrived at the tragical spot, a short but anxious delay of some seconds took place; after which they were joined by the lady with her friends. Little was said on either side, but Miss Gale, with customary decorum, shed tears. Pickney endeavored to preserve decorum, but a slight twitching in his mouth and eyebrows, proclaimed his inward agitation.

All necessary preliminaries having now been settled, and the prescribed melancholy formalities gone through, the usual question was put—"Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wife?" "I will."

He then put the fatal ring on Miss Gale's finger, the hymenial noose was adjusted, and the poor fellow was launched into matrimony.—[London Punch.

HOARDED RESENTMENT.—The subtilty that enters into resentments built upon minute points, and hoarded trifles, is not easily penetrated by observers, and is scarcely intelligible to people of large and comprehensive views. There are individuals—not a very numerous class, it is to be hoped—who have an extraordinary power, when it serves the occasion, of calling up out of a lifetime of kindly intercourse, a miraculous collection of small slights and offences, utterly forgotten by everybody else, if they ever had real existence, and getting up out of them a plausible catalogue of grievances, which they make it appear that they had borne with exemplary patience, in instances of this nature, however, it generally happens that the grievances are never disclosed till ssme fortunate opportunity arrives when they can be made use of advantageously, the meek virtue upon which they had been inflicted continuing to bear them with a smiling resignation up to the moment when it can turn them to a profitable purpose—[Labder of Gold.

Truth.

The power of truth is irresistable. We may run from it, but we cannot fight successfully against it. No one by resistance ever made the truth false. It is possible to resis the truth, or rather to turn aside from its influence, but it ever remains the truth still. Like God, the truth is eternal and unchangeable. When truth is permitted to exert its hallowed power upon us, it is sure to benefit us, but when we strive to push it from us, we lose by the effort. Light is light; a man may close his eyes or shut himself up in darkness, but all around him and in his hiding place, the light is still shining. Those who desire not to walk in the light are workers of evil; while those who wish to be governed by the truth seek it, earnestly and continually, that they may be thus governed. It is a bad sign to see men striving to get away from the truth, from whatever motive; "honesty is the best policy;" and we love to have all come to the light, that their deeds may be made manifest whether they be good or evil. Men who know they are doing wrong, think to hide by feigning ignorance, or making apologies, or excusing themselves, or by other subterfuges of hypocrisy; but if they would let the truth have its way, they would soon be ashamed of themselves, and be led to abandon their evil way. The world is blessed with the word of truth, as with the light of the sun; but how are they wedded to error, and will cling to their idols. They seem to think the truth will suffer by their delinquency. Not so. It must increase, but they will be sure to decrease. However they may think on the subject, the friends, advocates, and lovers of truth will come off "more than conquerors" in the end. "Truth must prevail."

Late from Heaven.

Unmarried young ladies, read this and never let slip a fair opportunity to get doubled:

"Swedenborg says, that though the virgins he saw in heaven were beautiful, the wives were incomparably more beautiful, and went on increasing in beauty evermore."

Tornado.

We learn from the Minden (La.) Herald that the town of Belle Vue, in that State, was recently visited by a tornado, which prostrated to the ground nearly every house in the place. Fortunately, however, no person was seriously hurt, though a number were buried beneath the ruins. The storm is represented as having twisted off trees fifteen or twenty feet from the root, and swept the tops clear away. The wind was preceded by a rumbling noise similar to that which usually precedes the shock of an earthquake, and was distinctly heard a distance of eight or nine miles.

Later from the British Provinces.

If the American postage on letters for the British Provinces, whether intended to be sent by the United States mails or by the British steamers, be not PREPAID, such letters are forwarded to the appropriate frontier post-office, where they, if not then called for, become DEAD, and in due course are forwarded to the dead letter office. Letters for the West Indies, Chagres and Panama, if the postage be PREPAID, are forwarded by sailing vessels only, and the same is true in regard to newspapers in both cases.

California, Oregon and Salt Lake.

Some six hundred according to the best information we can obtain have died on that truly fatal route. Caused by the impurities in the water

Truth and Falsehood.

BY JOHN PIERPONT.

On the page that is immortal,
We the brilliant promise see;
"Ye shall know the TRUTH, my people,
And its might shall make you free!"

For the TRUTH then let us battle,
Whatsoever fate betide!
Long the boast that we are FREEMEN,
We have made and published wide.

He who has the truth and keeps it,
Keeps what not to him belongs,
But performs a selfish action,
That his fellow mortal wrongs.

He who seeks the truth and trembles
At the dangers he must brave,
Is not fit to be a Freeman—
He, at best, is but a slave.

He who bears the Truth and places
Its high promptings under ban,
Loud may boast of all that's manly,
But can never BE A MAN.

Friend, this simple lay who readest,
Be not thou like either them,—
But to Truth give utmost freedom,
And the tide it raises, stem.

Bold in speech, and bold in action,
Be forever!—Time will test,
Of the free-souled and the slavish,
which fulfils life's mission best.

Be thou like the noble Ancient—
Scorn the threat that bids thee fear;
Speak!—no matter what betide thee;
LET them strike, but MAKE them hear!

Be thou like the first Apostles—
Be thou like heroic Paul;
If a free thought seek expression,
Speak it boldly!—Speak it all!

From the Millennial Star.

Extract from a work by Elder John Taylor about to be published in France.

"Man's body to him, then, is of great importance; and if he only knew, and appreciated his privileges he might live above the temptation of Satan, the influence of corruption; subdue his lusts, overcome the world, and triumph, and enjoy the blessings of God in time, and in eternity.

The object of man's taking a body is, that through the redemption of Jesus Christ, both soul and body may be exalted in the eternal world, when the earth shall be celestial, and obtain a higher exaltation than he could be capable of doing without a body. For when man was first made, he was made a "little lower than the angels." But through the atonement, and resurrection of Jesus Christ he is placed in a position to obtain an exaltation higher than angels. For, says the Apostle, "know ye not that we shall judge angels." Jesus descended below all things, that he might be raised above all things. He took upon him a body that he might die as a man; and "that through death he might destroy him that has power of death, even the devil." (Heb. ii. 14.) Having conquered death, then, in his own dominion, burst the barriers of the tomb, and ascended with his body triumphant to the right hand of God; he has accomplished a purpose which God had decreed from before the foundation of the world, and "opened the kingdom of Heaven unto all believers." Hence, man, through his obedience to the gospel, is placed in a position to be an adopted son of God, and have a legitimate right to his Father's blessings, and to possess the gift of the Holy Ghost.

And the Apostle says: "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 2.

Thus as Jesus vanished death, so may we: as he overcame, so may we; and if faithful, sit with him upon his throne, as he has overcome and sat down upon the throne of his Father." Rev. iii. 21. And so man will not only be raised from degradation, but also be exalted to a seat among the intelligences that surround the throne of God. And this is one great object to our coming here and taking bodies.

Another object that we came here for and took bodies was to propagate our species. For if it is for our benefit to come here, it is also for the benefit of others.

Hence the first commandment given to man was to "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth." (Gen. i. 28.) And as man is an eternal being, and all his actions have a relevancy to eternity, it is necessary that he understand his position well, and thus fulfil the measure of his creation; for as he and his offspring are destined to live eternally, he is not only responsible for his own acts, but, in a great measure, for those of his children; in training their minds, regulating their morals, setting them a correct example, and teaching them correct principles, but more especially in preserving the purity of his own body. And why? because if he abuses his body and corrupts himself, he not only injures himself but his partner or associates, and entails misery incalculable upon his posterity, who are doomed to inherit the father's misery, this not only in time, but in eternity. Hence the Lord has given laws regulating marriage, and chastity, of the strictest kind, and entailed the severest punishment upon those who in different ages have abused this sacred ordinance. For example: the curse of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the terrible judgments pronounced against those who should corrupt and defile their bodies. Let any one read Deut. xii. 13 to 30. Again, "know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17.) And why? because man being made a free agent over his own body, that he might exalt himself and his posterity, both in time and eternity, if he abuses that power, he not only affects himself, but unborn bodies and spirits; corrupting the world, and opening the floodgates of vice, immorality and enstrangement from God, Hence the children of Israel were told not to intermarry with the surrounding nations, lest their seed should become corrupt, and the people turn to idolatry; which would lead to the forgetfulness of God, to an ignorance of his purposes and designs, he would lose sight of the object of his creation, and corrupt himself, and this would lead to the introduction of every other evil, as a natural consequence. But when the order of God is carried out, it places things in a lovely position. What is more amiable and pleasant than those pure, innocent, endearing affections which God has placed in the hearts of the male and female, who are united in lawful matrimony, with a love and affection, pure as the love of God, because it springs from him, and is his gift: with bodies chaste and virtuous, and an offspring, lovely, healthy, pure, innocent, and uncontaminated; confiding in each other, they live together in the fear of God, enjoying natures gift's uncorrupted, and undefiled as the driven snow, or the chrystal stream. But how would this enjoyment be enhanced if they understood their destiny, could unravel the designs of God, and contemplate an eternal union in another state of existence, a connexion with this offspring, commenced here, to endure for ever, and all their ties, relationships, and affections strengthened. A mother feels great delight in beholding her child, and gazing on its lovely infant form; how would her bosom swell with delight at the contemplation of that child being with her forever. And if we only understood our position, this was the object for which we came into the world. And the object of the kingdom of God, on which I have written at length, is to re-establish all these holy principles. Chastity and purity are things of the greatest importance to the world; hence the prophet says, "Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously, yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make one? yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? that he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth." Mal. ii. 14, 15.

Here, then, the object of purity is pointed out clearly; and what is it? that God might preserve a godly seed. Saint Paul says, "What, know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot, is one body? for two, saith he shall be one flesh—flee fornication. Every sin that a man doth is without the body: but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body. What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own." 1 Cor. vi., 16—20. And in the next chapter, he speaks of the some things, which Malachi does concerning a pure seed. "For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy," vii, 14.

The legislators of all civilised nations have seen the necessity of sustaining these things, and, consequently, have generally passed very rigid laws for the protection of female virtue, and the support of the marriage contract. Hence, acts have been passed and enforced dismheriting those who were not born in wedlock. This has produced a salutary effect. Ministers of the various churches have also used their influence, in a great measure, in support of virtuous principles. These have had their influence in assisting to stem the torrents of iniquity. But, as the nations themselves have forsaken God, how can they expect to stop this crying evil? For the very legislators who pass these laws, are, in many instances, guilty themselves. And when kings, princes, and rulers, corrupt themselves, how can they expect the people to be pure? for no matter how rigid law may be, corrupt persons will always find means to evade it. And, indeed, so far have these abominations gone, that it seems to be an admitted fact, that these things cannot be controlled; and although there are laws relating to matrimonial alliances, yet there are some nations called Christian, who actually give license for prostitution, and all the degradation and misery associated with it.

Nor are these things connected with the lower ranks of life. Wantonness and voluptuousness go hand in hand, and revel unchecked in courts, among the kings and nobles of the earth; the statesman, the politician, the merchant, the mechanic, the laborer, have all corrupted themselves. The world is full of adultery, intrigue, fornication and abominations. Let any one go to the masked balls in the principal theatres in Paris, and he will see thousands of people of both sexes, impudently, shamelessly, and unblushingly manifesting their lewd dispositions. Indeed, debauch and wantonness bear fearful sway. Not to speak of the dens of abominations that exist elsewhere. London abounds with unfortunate beings, led on by example, seduction, and misery, to their fallen degraded condition.

The same thing exists throughout England, France, the United States, and, in fact, all nations. Hence, millions of youth corrupt themselves, engender the most loathsome diseases, and curse their posterity with their sin; who in their turn rise up and tread in the corrupt steps of their fathers. Not to say anything of the thousands of lovely beings whom God designed for companions to men in time and in eternity, by whom to raise up a pure offspring; now corrupted, degraded, polluted; and fallen; poor miserable wretches, outcasts of society; insulted, oppressed, despised and abused; led on from one degree of degradation to another, till death, as a friend, closes their miserable able existence, and, yet, without hope.

Thus, man that was made pure in the image of his Maker, that could stand proudly erect as the representative of God, pure and uncontaminated, is debased, fallen, corrupt, diseased, and sunk below the brute creation; a creature of lusts and passions, and a slave to his unbridled appetite. I speak plain on this subject, and I do it, because it is a curse to the world, and God will have a reckoning with the nations for these things.

In vain, then, men legislate on these matters; the nations have corrupted themselves, and these things are beyond their control. Men must be governed by higher and purer motives than merely human enactments.

If the world understood its true position, and the eternal consequences to them and their seed, they would feel differently. They would feel that they were eternal beings; that they were responsible to God, both for their bodies and spirits, and nothing but a knowledge of man's fall and true position, and the development of the kingdom of God, can restore man to his true position; bring again the order and economy of God, and place man in his natural position on the earth."

From the North American and U. S. States Gazette.

Comparative Power of the States.

The approach to completion of the census returns enables us to give the following comparative table of the power of the Individual States, as represented in the National Council, or rather of their increase and decrease of power during the last decade. The slave States are in Italics:

ADVANCING STATES.

Pennsylvania gains 1 member, Illinois 2, Missouri 2, Indiana 1, Arkansas 1, Massachusetts 1, Mississippi 1, Michigan 1.

STATES WHICH HOLD THEIR OWN IN THE UNION.

Connecticut, New Jersey, Ohio, Maryland, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Delaware, Rhode Island.

DECLINING STATES.

South Carolina loses 2 members, Virginia 2, New York 1, Maine 1, North Carolina 1, Vermont 1, New Hampshire 1.

Florida and Delaware are properly declining States, but having but one member each, of course cannot lose. In justice to the other States, the ratio of representation should never be less than the representative population of the smallest State. At present Florida, with 18,000, has as much political power as Rhode Island, with a free population of 143,000.

New York is the Empire State in population, but her comparative increase is less than that of the whole country, and her power and influence are therefore declining.

Pennsylvania is, as before, the second in the Union. She has been steadily gaining on New York for the last 20 years, but can hardly overtake her before 40 or 50 years, before which many changes may occur.

Ohio has been in the Union 60 years, and has arrived at maturity. She trod hard on the heels of Pennsylvania 10 years back, but is distanced in the comparative account, and is not likely to advance in power.

Virginia has been steadily falling back, and will probably be overhauled by Indiana in the next decade.

Massachusetts has gained nobly the last 10 years, and is the most active and progressive of all the old Thirteen except Pennsylvania.

No State west of the Mountains has lost in power.

The advancing States are three of the Slave and five Free.

The declining States are three of them Slave and four Free.

Texas, Iowa, California, Wisconsin and Florida, having been admitted since last census, are not classed in the above table.

The entire North gains two members.

The entire South loses one member.

The sceptre is gradually traveling westward. The Old Thirteen gain two and lose seven members.

New England gains one and loses three members.

The Middle States hold their own.

The eleven Southern Atlantic and Gulf States lose four members.

The other four Southern States gain three members.

And the West and Northwest (of course the New States not counted) gain four members.

Disastrous News from the Plains.

We are indebted to a gentleman of St. Louis for the following extract from a letter of Miles Beach, Esq., to his wife, in this city, giving intelligence of the most painful and exciting character. We hope, notwithstanding the authentic source from which this news proceeds, that there may prove to be some mistake about it. Mr. Beach says:

We have been informed that all the California emigrants who started a few days ago for California, by the southern route, were murdered by the Indians—women and children included. It is expected that the Indians will be very troublesome next season to all the emigrants.—[Union.

Self-Made Men.

Columbus was a weaver; Franklin a journeyman printer; Sextus V. was employed in herding swine; Furguson and Burns were ploughmen. Æsop was a slave; Hogarth an engraver on pewter pots; Ben Johnson was a bricklayer; Porson was the son of a darish clerk; Akenside was the son of a butcher—so was Wolsey,—Cervantes was a common soldier; Halley was the son of a soap boiler; Arkwright was a barber, Belzoni the son of a barber; Blackstone and Southey were the sons of linen drapers; Crabbe a fisherman's son, Keats the son of a livery stable keeper; Captain Cook began his career as a cabin boy; Hayden was the son of a wheelwright; Hogg was a shepherd.

Fights in a grog shop are now called spiritual knockings.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

KANESVILLE, Iowa, April 6, 1851.

The annual Conference of Pottawatamie District of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened at the Grove at date.

Present of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, Orson Hyde President.

Present of the High Council of the Church at this place, James Allred, President, George Coulson, Ira Oviatt, G. W. Harris, James Snow, W. W. Lane, Jacob G. Bigler, Jacob Bigler, Henry W. Miller, C. C. Pendleton, and Jonathan Browning.

Bishops present, W. W. Lane, Presiding Bishop in Pottawatamie County, Jacob G. Bigler and Lorenzo Johnson, his Counsellors.

Chorister, B. B. Messenger.

The Choir sung "Welcome Delightful Morn." Prayer by George Coulson. The Choir then sung. After which George Coulson motioned that Elder Orson Hyde preside over the Conference; carried unanimously.

Elder Hyde then arose, and nominated Evan M. Greene, to act as Clerk of the Conference, and David Candland his assistant, carried unanimously.

Motioned that Daniel Mackintosh be Reporter, carried.

President Hyde then addressed the assembled multitude as follows:

It is necessary for us to know our present condition. You all know what our condition was five years ago, the wide spreading prairie lay before us,—the sons of the forest as Lords of the same, were our neighbors. We came here under very peculiar circumstances,—were driven out from our homes in Illinois at the instigation of an infuriated and blood thirsty mob, to find shelter among the savages of the great west. We, like our father Abraham came out from among the people, to seek a country we knew not of: and inasmuch as we are like him in faithfulness to our God, we are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise; and the apostle, while speaking of his seed, does not limit their dominion, to this world, but says; all things are your's, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's. If all things are given to the Saints, then don't you see what I said before; that the salvation of God is extended to all the children of men. Straight is the gate and narrow the way that leadeth to life, &c. From these and the following remarks, many have gathered the idea, that but few will be saved. Depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire, &c. Now here is the strong hold of many who disbelieve the doctrine I have advanced. Noah prepared an ark for his own salvation, and that of his house, that the Old World might see that he acted according to his faith, and thus his faith was made manifest by his works.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants says: of those who objected his warning, that the Lord prepared a prison for them. This prison is represented in the scriptures to be an everlasting prison, but the sacred Volume does not advance the idea that its inmates were to remain there everlastingly, without relase or change. For illustration look at our State prison,—the prison is there always for the transgressors of the law to be confined in, according to the aggravation of their crimes, but whenever the period arrives that justice is satisfied, and they have answered the end of the law, and suffered its just penalty as transgressors,—they are then released, and suffered to go at large among the people, having there freedom, though the prison remains there still. The Bishop whispered "how long will they have to continue in prison, those who have not paid their tithing? Delinquents answer. I will here illustrate Love and Fear, it is written in the Bible that God's mercy, or love endureth forever; but his wrath is but for a moment. For example; you read of the man who fell among thieves which shews the goodness of God extended, that love, or attachment might be generated in the creature towards him. The genius of the governments of the world is,—"The higher the power, the nearer to mercy's Fountain." A good son getting a dollar from his Father and wisely appropriating it, by and by the Father delivers all that he has into the son's hands: thus fulfilling the language of scripture, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

I would here ask: what has preserved us as a people, amid our fluctuations and changes, which have been rather adverse sometimes? Our union and fidelity in one common cause, and the moral influence used.

Have I injured any of you, in dollars and cents since I have been your presiding officer? If any individuals have been injured, or wronged in this respect by me, answer? Jew or Gentile! A dead silence ensued for several minutes, and no reply. I appeal to high Heaven, (with hat off and right hand stretched upward) that inasmuch as I have wronged any, it has been through ignorance, and not design.

Some say, that I am as kind to the Gentiles, as to the Jews or those in the Church. There is a principle in my breast that I cherish, that is righteousness. I view things ahead with a prophetic eye, and see them all in the Church; for our heavenly Father maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. If we only love them that love us, what reward have we? the publicans do the same. Principle, aside from sympathy, should be the character of a counsellor, and so long as a man conducts himself aright, whither he is in the Church, or out of the Church, he will be protected in his rights as long as I am your presiding officer. The Church is this day twenty-one years old, and some would have us believe that at that period she was to declare her independence, but all the independence I have to declare is what I have declared in your ears this day. Independence of character upon principle, aside from cobweb sympathy, or mock friendship. Let no gossip go away and say that Br. Hyde said that we were independent of the United States Government; if any do, they shall be damned.

I believe somewhat like David Crockett, "Know that you are right and then go ahead."

Since I have been your presiding officer, it has fallen to my lot to serve you in the capacity of Judge, not only in matters of Church, but of State also. The tenure of this, my office, has been suspended upon your confidence and good-will; and upon the necessity of the case; there being hitherto, no constitutional judiciary in the land. But, as the Legislature have now made other provisions in this respect, in pursuance of which, a District Judge is about to be elected; it becomes highly proper for me to tender to you the resignation of this part of my office. You are well aware that it must be very gratifying to any man going out of office, to know that he goes out, free from censure, and honorably. If, therefore, I have wronged or oppressed any man or woman, let the injured or aggrieved party now freely speak? (A lengthy pause, and dead silence were the only reply.) If I have served you faithfully and discharged my duty to you according to your views and good sense of right and wrong, please signify it by the usual sign of uplifted hands: (all hands up, not a dissenting vote.) I thank you for this last token of your approbation and good will towards me. I now retire satisfied, after giving you this caution: Do not quarrel about your claims, neither "jump" the claims of any.

Conference adjourned till Sunday, the 20th inst., at half past ten o'clock, A. M.

Adjourned Conference.

SUNDAY, April 20, 1851.

Convened at the Grove at half past ten o'clock, weather rather chilly with showers of hail and rain occasionally. The choir sung a hymn. Prayer by Elder Hyde; after which President Hyde, stated, that in consequence of the unsettled state of the weather, we would have to proceed immediately to the business part of the Conference; and further said: it must needs be that offences come, but woe to them by whom they come; but if they should come, we must endure hardship as good soldiers.

The Apostle Paul said: "I know this, that after my departure grievious wolves shall enter in among you not sparing the flock, also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them. Of necessity there must certain men rise up; and I look at them as if they were inspired of God, and raised up in the same way that Pharoah was raised up, that God might show forth his power through them. Though Satan is fallen, he is controled by our Heavenly Father, and is used for some good purpose as those who have affinity to him.

On motion, President Brigham Young was sustained in his office as President of the Church, by a unanimous vote.

Moved that Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards, be sustained as his Counsellors.

Elder Hyde stated with regard to the others officers there, that they were under the control of the first Presidency—hence no need for an action in their case. He also stated that there was another character before them, and that his course and conduct were always before there vision.

On motion, Orson Hyde was sustained as President of the Twelve Apostles by a unanimous vote—and upon the presumption that the quorum were one in all things, there was no reason why they should not all be presented at once,—their several localities were named,—the motion put, and carried unanimously in the affimative. The Elder then stated that his highest ambition was to do right.

Moved by President Hyde and seconded, that his Counsellors be sustained: carried unanimously.

On motion, Bishop W. W. Lane, and his Counsellors was sustained, carried.

On motion, W. Draper, Sen., be sustained as Patriarch of the Church in Pottawatamie carried.

The President adverted to the case of Father Cutler, and after some salutary remarks, moved that he be cut off from the Church, carried by a unanimous vote.

On motion, D. P. Raney, W. Redfield, Nathan A. West, Walter W. Cox, and Amos Cox, were cut off, for aiding and abetting Father Cutler, and promulgating his insidious views.

President Hyde stated; it will be recollected that last year the case of Father Cutler was brought up before the Conference; we said if he would move up among us, and manifest a wish to go to the Valley, I would pledge myself that he should receive the means to go with. He has never been here, but endeavored to exercise an influence to draw away people after him. He now says; that he received his commission from Br. Joseph, because he thinks that Br. Brigham will not sustain him in his foolish operations.

The Choir then sung, "Now let us rejoice in the day of Salvation."

The President then arose and said: I want to say something about emigration. I expect to go myself; but will not go until the emigrants get across the river. I have an anxiety to speak unto you freely; but I do not feel that this is the day to speak upon the subject in consequence of the weather,—but a few words touching emigration. It is with us, as with our Fathers: we are strangers and pilgrims on earth. There never were any people that received promises from heaven, but had to be the same. For instance. Abraham: Did he live in his father's house and home all his days? It was said to him, as recorded in the acts of the Apostles; "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into a land that I will show thee." I will give it to thee for an everlasting possession: yet Abraham died, and did not receive (if Stephen's testimony be true) one foot of it; for he, and his seed had died not having received the promises, but saw them afar off and were persuaded of them and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on earth;—they sought a city which had foundations whose builders and maker is God. John says, "he saw the city descend from God out of Heaven, as a Bride adorned for her Husband, and then he said; behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, &c. The reward is reserved for those who come up through great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

After a lengthy discourse on tithing he referred to the Revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants on the subject, and promised peace, health, and prosperity to those who crossed the plains, and also to those who remained, inasmuch as they did their duty, and what the law of the Lord required, and abstain from murmuring and ingratitude.

Br. James C. Snow, having been appointed as traveling agent for this High Council to settle all difficulties arising in the branches of the Church, of a moral or spiritual nature, was confirmed in this office and calling by a unanimous vote. By the consent of parties, he may also act as traveling Bishop to settle differences arising out of demands of dollars and cents, or any property of value.

The Bishop and his Counsellors are the most suitable men to settle matters of difference arising out of dollars and cents, because it is more in accordance with the nature of their office and calling, to transact temporal business. By the consent of parties, the Bishop may also settle differences of a moral or spiritual kind. This arrangement is not designed to be applicable any farther than this Bishoprick.

President Hyde continued, and said: I hope that you, who are able, will turn out some cattle or money or both to the aid of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund. Turn out your cattle and money and vest it where it will redound to your everlasting honor, and the poor will bless you, and God will bless you. We want to increase the Fund and extend its operations abroad, and in other countries, and other lands.

You that want cattle from the poor fund, whose names have not been published, call and get them, and feed them well on corn and hay, and prepare yokes and break them to work, or you may not get them. Others may importune us so strongly that we shall let them all go.

The Elders who are going out on missions, are requested meet at the New Hall on Hyde street, at 3 o'clock, P. M. On motion, the Conference adjourned to meet on the 6th of October next, at this place. Dr. George Coulson, of Council Point, closed by prayer.

A great concourse of people was present; and although the day was very unfavorable, the people anxious to hear, remained on the ground till the final close. Harmony, union, and the spirit of God ruled the meeting. And happy are we to say, that not a dissenting vote was given to any measure proposed. All was right, and all was well. The Lord be praised, and let the people say Amen. DANIEL MACKINTOSH, Reporter.

Emigrants and Citizens be Cautious!

Our Town now begins to be thronged with strangers, and all parties would do well to be on the alert against the depredations of thieves. Last year some few came as far as this place, stole horses from the citizens and also money and horses from emigrants, and ran away back. There are always some abandoned characters that mix with the multitude for the sake of stealing. We do not know that any thefts have been committed particularly, on a very large scale: yet, from the experience of last year, a word of caution now may not be ill-timed.

Teamsters, Attention.

On Tuesday, May 6th, those who have agreed to haul goods for Livingston & Kinkead, are requested to assemble at Council Point, and receive their goods and then go into camp, preparatory to an organization for crossing the river, and for proceeding on over the plains. After wagons have recieved their freight, they will not return home again, but go into camp, and remain there until they move off.

Arrivals.

Doctor John M. Bernhisel, the agent from Utah, and General A. W. Babbitt, her delegate, arrived in this Town, a few days since from Washington City on their way to Salt Lake Valley. General Babbitt and Mr. Stephen B. Rose, the Indian Agent, came in company. Dr. Bernhisel came alone a few days earlier, and soon after him, came the Library which he was appointed to select: all in good order, safe and sound.

It will be remembered that General Babbitt told the good folks of this County last year that he could do nothing for Utah at Washington City unless we voted the Democratic Ticket, or remained neutral and not vote at all. But the people voted; yet not the Democratic Ticket: and consequently this action of the people here put it out of the General's power to do any thing for Utah: But something has been done for Utah, notwithstanding the people voted for Miller, the Whig Candidate, and he was elected. To whom then shall we award the credit and honor of this good work, done for the Basin Territory? Not to General Babbitt, certainly, because he could do nothing: Well then, we ascribe the Honor to God—to the liberality of Congress, and to the diligence and persevering industry of Doctor John M. Bernhisel, their unassuming, gentlemanly, and temperate Agent.

Let it not be forgotten, that General Babbitt, advised the people here last season to vote for the man whose name stands ingloriously immortalized on the list of scamps on account of his identity with the stealing of our rights from the archives of the Temple of Freedom. Never forget the man who endorsed the fellonious deed by advising you to vote for him who is believed to have been the guilty perpetrator. In his political crusades, Gen. B. became the willing tool of ambitious men with the understanding that he was to get his seat through the influence of those men who sent him upon this errand: But alas! they voted against the measure, as we hear, when it came to the touch stone.

It is argued by some that our attack upon the General has done injury, &c. Perhaps it has marred the feelings of some who wish to screen him from a just rebuke for assaulting the arrangments of a people to whom he was not sent by any authority that we recognized,—for stirring up strife and ill feelings where peace and good-will reigned.

The General has brought a press, and we hear, intends publishing a paper in the defence of his meddlesome course. If any honorable Democrat, Whig or Independant, should wish to start a press in this Town or County, we should bid him welcome: But when a man comes under the wing and profession of the Church to set up a press to justify and defend his seditious movements, he cannot expect to be held in fellowship, particularly when he is guilty of other immoralities sufficient to exclude him.

We have not left our post to run to Washington City to interfere with the business which he was sent there to do, though none the less conscious that the interests of Utah, required such or similar interferance. But the General declares that the truth shall be published in Kanesville, once.

Well then, we conclude he makes no calculation to edit the paper himself. We would advise the people of Utah to send a delegate to Washington next time who can do something for them if we should happen to vote, in Pottawatamie, just as we please;—One who will scorn to impeach the dignity and honor of Congress by saying, they will do nothing for you, if a few back-woodsmen in Pottawatamie County do not vote to please a few demagogues like himself.

When a representative from Utah honors himself and his constituents, and conducts himself worthy of a great people, we will respect and love him; but when he forsakes his calling to go on an electioneering tour, and meddles where the institutions and usages, of a people, which he claims to revere, give him no right,—hypocritically taking the advantage of his religious professions to thwart the purposes and designs of his superiors we shall rebuke him; and thereby seek to shield an honorable and highminded people from the disgrace and dishonor which our silence would seal upon us, by which we should tacitly acknowledge our fellowship for profligacy and libertinism; and if any weak members wince at it, let them console themselves with the fact that they have strength enough left to stand his profaning the name of the Most High!

We trust, therefore, that every Latter-day Saint throughout the Country, and every friend to the cause, will allow Mr. Babbitt to prosecute his seditious work without their countenance or aid in any form, until he gets the sanction of the Presidency in the Valley, to proceed on in his course and divide the child, to gratify a selfish and stubbornwill, that refuses to yield to a wholesome chastisement for that which five thousand members of our Church in this section know him worthy to receive.

However plausible may be the General's statements about his press, it is clearly evident that he designs no good to this people or to the cause in which we are engaged, by putting it in operation in this section under existing circumstances. In proof of this statement, look at the spirits that favor his course.

If the General is only talking about setting his press in operation here, and does not intend doing so, but merely to frighten us into measures, he is much mistaken in his calculations,—besides proving that he prefers falsehood and misrepresentation to honest, ungornished, and straight forward truth. The General may talk about advertising for one half what we do,—he may talk of publishing his paper at one half our rates, out of pure disinterested benevolence; we intend to keep steadily on our course, and shall entertain no fears as to the result. When we are conscious that we are right, we shall never say to our opponent, Oh, don't!

A Bare-faced and Wicked Lie!

For which we shall hold the Editor of the St. Joseph Gazette responsible unless he publishes the name of his informant. "A gentleman from Kanesville." We challenge the Gazette to give us the name of said Informant. His article concerning the discovery of a body, supposed to be that of Gingry is false in every allusion. The matter was never spoken of in any Council here that we have any knowledge of. No design with any one to keep the discovery a secret. Mr. Gingry was not in Kanesville on the evening before he disappeared. Major Barrow, if in St. Joseph can contradict this statement; for he knows that he was at Trading Point, and at a late hour left to go home across the river.

It was reported that the remains of a body had been discovered near a Slough, some two miles from Kanesville. We went to the place, accompanied by Mr. J. B. Stutsman, Mr. A. C. Hodge & Son; and several other citizens. We dug out the remains, and were much at a loss to come to any conclusion about them. We gathered up some pieces of cloth—some hair, and some bones—brought them to our office, and exhibited them to Mr. Grove and to any citizen that wished to see them. We offered to give to Mr. Grove, who seemed to be Mr. Gingry's friend, all the relics we had, if he thought they would lead to any discovery; but he declined taking them. We conversed with Bishop Lorenzo Johnson upon the subject, who resides near the place, and he informed us that he saw the Grave before he went out to meet us on the plains last fall, which was in October. We conversed also with Mr. Gardner who also lives near the place, and he said that a Squaw sickened, died and was buried there about a year ago. The remnants of cloth which we gathered up about the Grave, indicated that it was a Squaw; and this is one reason why nothing more was particularly said about it. We still have the relics which Mr. Stutsman, myself and others collected.

We now ask the Gazette to give us the name of his informant from Kanesville, who was so ignorant as never to have heard of the discovery in its time; and still so knowing as to be able to declare that it was decided in Council to keep it secret.

Give us the name of your Kanesville informant, and we will exonerate you.

Singular Theft.

A few nights ago, Mrs. Powers of this place, lost eleven beautiful peach trees. The thief pried them out of the ground with a stick of wood. They were just about in bloom. Some person, not far away, has taken them; as no one would think to carry them any great distance. Will any one give information at this office if he can, who of his neighbors, or acquaintances, have lately set out young peach trees. None have been imported into the country that we know of. Let every person who despises a thief, watch for these trees, and notice who has planted any out this Spring. The person who stole them will not eat of their fruit; and unless he repent and restore, he will fall into a snare, and the fruits of his labor shall be blast and mildew, gall and bitterness; and nothing that he doeth shall prosper. Remember what we say, and consider well your condition.

Snow Storm.

On Tuesday morning last, we were visited by a most powerful Snow Storm which continued during the early part of the day. The snow fell to the depth of some three inches, besides more than as much again that melted. Rather severe on early gardens. It has continued cold and frosty since.

High Council.

This body at its last session, separated Hon. A. W. Babbitt from the fellowship of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: not for any thing immoral or criminal done in Washington. The Council did not deal with him as the delegate from Utah. To the people of Utah who sent him to Washington, is he amenable for his conduct as a delegate from that New Territory. But it was for profanity and intemperance in the streets of Kanesville; and for corrupting the morals of the people here by giving them liquor to beguile them from the path of duty and honor. Thus prostituting to the shrine of party zeal, his priestly powers, by which to operate upon the low and deranged passions of men: and for ministering by his priestly office, in things that are forbidden.

Mr. Babbitt did not appear on notice, but by a note denied the jurisdiction of the Council to try him for fellowship, considered the charges and proceedings malicious, and claimed not to know his accusers when the charges were made by the Council, and under their authority the notice was served.

Just as we were going to press, a friend said; "you are giving to Mr. Babbitt the title of General which does not belong to him." We ask pardon if it is so. We heard Mr. Rose the Indian Agent who came with him, give him that title; and as the delegation is direct from Head Quarters of Political truth, style, fashion and honor, we cannot for one moment think that we have been misled in this matter to give Mr. Babbitt a title that does not belong to him. We cannot for a moment doubt that he has been Brevetted for the wonders he has wrought in the land.

Under Current.

A Public Supper is assayed to be given to the officers of Utah by the citizens of this place. That is very well. Honor to whom honor. But when a few factionists are conscious that their Real Guest has rendered himself meritoriously unpopular,—so much so that they are constrained to pay their homage to him through other, and honorable names, it looks like being accessary before the fact of stealing a little honor. We don't like that white heap!

Mr. O'Mynster.

The failure of this gentleman to fulfil his contracts, in this section, at the time agreed upon, is subjecting a number of our citizens to inconvenience and damage, who may justly require, and legally obtain damages on account of disappointment occasioned by the non-fulfilment of his contracts.

Dead Body Found.

A few days since, no little stir and excitement were made in our town upon the supposed discovery of the remains of Mr. Gingry, who was missing at Trading Point, a few months ago. We visited the place, saw the remains, and from what we discovered of cloth and various remnants of clothing, and hair, we should judge to have been the remains of a squaw. We have satisfactory evidence that this body was discovered there before the party left last fall to go out to meet us on the Plains. Bishop Lorenzo Johnson, told us that he saw the grave before that time. In justice to all concerned, or not concerned, we feel it our duty to make these statements.

TEA.

The best of every thing is kept by our merchants in this town. Clerks and proprietors are courteous and obliging; and a little cash is always acceptable to them in exchange for their commodities. But tea! The best that we have tasted, is kept by Joseph A. Kelting, at the Utah and California Depot. It is not only good; but better, and even best of any that we have sipped.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSON, at the "Emporium of the West," has just received a fresh supply of almost every thing to eat, drink and wear; to cure diseases—corns, biles and rheumatism; besides cordials, highly spiced with the essence and Balsam of Life, served up with a suitable quantity of poetic effusions, dipped in the milk of human kindness; and dealt out according to order at all times, by day or by night.

Consistency.

What sort of Church members must those be who give to a man a Public Dinner for his alleged virtues and merits, after the High Council of said Church have excommunicated him from their fellowship for vices and demerits which his warmest supporters well know and understand; and which they are both afraid and ashamed to Confess? "Evil communications corrupt good manners."

From the Millennial Star, March 15th.

Just in time for the present number of the Star, we are favored, by Elder Lorenzo Snow, with the following soul-stirring account of the work of the Lord in Italy, which will cause the heart-strings of every Saint to vibrate with celestial tones of praise and thanksgiving to Zion's God for his blessings to His people in Piedmont. "The veil over Italy has begun to burst,"—the Alpine hills have began to reverbrate the tidings of salvation, the gift of the Holy Ghost, to those who have wandered long in darkness—and the sound of their congratulations, in the New Covenant of life, has reached our ears. They speak like Saints. Their bosoms already burn with love, and feilowship, towards their brethren in other lands. The aged that has almost numbered his threescore and ten, scarcely expecting to behold his brethren, generally, on earth, hopes to embrace them in the resurrection not far off; indeed, the spirit of the Gospel seems to pervade their minds richly, as their several salutations fully bespeak; which, also, witness the purity and faith of those who have sown this seed in their hearts.

Whenever we have meditated upon the subject of the Italian mission, it has been accompanied with the utmost assurance, that the word of the Lord must take a deep and powerful root in that land; that a host of the seed of promise are wandering there, till the light of Revelation shall shine upon them; and we are constrained to say, the day is near, when the Gospel tidings will roll among the people of those countries, with a rapidity, and power, fully equal to the most sanguine desires which its ministers dare entertain.

We feel to salute our brethren of "Vallee de Luserne" in the Love, and the fellowship, of the Holy Spirit. Should our little Star reach them, they may be assured of the daily prayers of thousands in their behalf, that the goodness and mercy of our Heavenly Father may abound unto them, more and more, through our Lord Jesus Christ, and the manifestation of his Holy Spirit; that the light which has now dawned upon their path, may grow brighter and brighter, through obedience to the precious instructions which they will receive from Elder Woodard. The ruse-deguerre by which he "got rid of the chaff while the good grain remained," evinces his possession of "that wisdom which is from above, and which is profitable to direct." We hope, ere long, to get similar tidings from Elder Stenhouse in Switzerland.

Glad Tidings of Great Joy.

MORE BAPTISMS IN ITALY.

LA TOUR, VALLEE DE LUSERNE, PIEDMONT, ITALY, February 26th, 1851.

DEAR PRESIDENT SNOW:—I am happy to inform you that the brethren and sisters in Italy are all well, and send their salutations to you, with the request that you will also salute the churches in England for them.

On the 24th February, two young men presented themselves for baptism. It rained and snowed amain, and the atmosphere was so dense that we could not see distinctly a little way a-head. But as we descended towards the Angrogna River a singular scene was presented the clouds suddenly rent asunder, as if they had been a piece of paper, and the side of mount Brigham was visible in a moment from the top to the bottom. I exclaimed, the veil over Italy has burst, and yet at the instant I knew not what I was saying. I stood paralyzed with the magnificent view which opened on every side; then with a prayer to Israel's God, we entered the stream.

In the evening a congregation assembled and I commenced preaching; but the devil entered into some who had been resisting the truth, and I saw that he had got firm hold, and my words seemed to be wasted on the assembly, through the presence of such a deadening and defiling influence. I therefore stopped short, and sat down after giving an intimation that every body might go where they liked. By this means I got rid of the chaff, while the good grain remained I then recommenced preaching, and the power of God rested upon us. Many a tear rolled down those weather-beaten faces. The next day I baptized ten persons; they are not the rich and noble, but you shall judge them by their own language, as they have each given me a line to send to their foreign brethren. They are as follows:—

1 May we meet when the earth is renovated.

2 Pray for a young sister who wishes to grow in grace.

3 Absent in body, but united in spirit.

4 Hallelujah, for the Lord hath remembered his people.

5 If we do not meet in these bodies, may we embrace each other in the resurrection. (This is from a brother who is sixty-two years old.)

6 In the midst of weakness I hope for strength.

7 Pray for a poor brother.

8 May we be crowned with glory when the world is judged.

The other brethren and sisters have sent the following:—We thank our heavenly Father that we have begun to walk in the pathway of a new and endless life.

One brother, who is a firm believer in the "Voice of Joseph," I have advanced as an elder. Five months ago he was requested to take the office of Elder in the Waldensian Church. This he refused.

Please address my letters as usual, but add "Poste Restante." I do not see an opening at the present moment, but I believe the Lord will enable me to be independent of the Hotel, and by that means I shall know more as to the true character of the inhabitants

Remember me to sister Woodard, and all friends whom you see in your travels.

All kinds of calumny and petty persecution are brought into use. The devil is not ille here, and sometimes he tells the truth.

Yours is the new and everlasting covenant. JABEZ WOODARD.

Drowned.

At Trading Point on Tuesday, the 22d ult., an Oregon Emigrant from Buchannan County, Mo., was accidentally drowned while attempting to swim his stock cross the Missouri River at that place. It was said that he had quite a sum of money upon his person. Ineffectual efforts were made to recover his body. But he is gone! Wonder if some Kanesville renegade will not forthwith inform the Editor of the St. Joseph Gazette that the Mormons killed him for his money, and decided in Council to keep it a secret! This would be a precious titbit for the Gazette.

Corn.

This article cannot fail to rise. Twenty or twenty-five cents a bushel poorly repays the farmer for his toil. More cash may be made by letting it remain in the cribthan to sell it at the above prices.

A lazy woman is the most worthless and troublesome piece of household furniture a man can have. If she knows nothing about domestic duties, she is not a helpmate but an encumbrance.—[Exchange.

Three of the ablest and most eminent of the American Editors of the last half century have died within a few days—John S. Skinner, in Baltimore, Isaac Hill, in Washington, and Mordecai M. It is not often that the editorial profession is called to mourn so heavy a loss in the course of two or three days.—[N. Y. Tribune.

Complimentary Supper

In consideration of the efficient services rendered by Doctor John M. Bernhisel, in Washington City, during the years 1849 and 50, favorable to the establishment of a Territorial Government for Utah. A large portion of the citizens of this Town and County, turned out on Saturday evening, 19th ult., and gave a sumptuous Supper in honor of said Guest. Our high-minded Merchants were there to a man; also, Judge Sloan, and a number of the members of the Bar, in connection with many warm friends and acquaintances of the Doctor. The tables were spread at 7 o'clock, and at the head sat the worthy Guest, supported by Elder Hyde, on the right, and Hon. Henry W. Miller, on the left.

The following toasts were read after Supper by E. M. Greene, Toastmaster. They are the mingled and true sentiments of the citizens of this place towards Utah,—her honorable and upright Agent, Dr. John M. Bernhisel.

Toast 1.—The People of Kanesville. Their hospitality this evening, manifests their appreciation of merit, their Motto, MEN, and MEASURES.—[Veritas.

Toast 2.—Utah, and Her Agent. Doctor John M. Bernhisel, single in aim for Freedom, loyal to his God, his country, and his constituents. Long may he live to grace the soil, and perpetuate the fame of FATHER TAU.—[Oceana.

Toast 3.—Deseret. May she always set a example worthy of imitation by all her sters in the Union.—[Veritas.

Toast 4.—The Pioneers of the West. The orters of the Constitution, the friends of erty and Union, foremost in war, foreost in peace, and last, but not least, in the uncils of the Nation.—[Pioneer.

Toast 5.—The Press. More wealth to e rich, the poor man's befriender. To the earned a tutor, the oppressed's defender. he Herald of knowledge, and to Science e gate. The compass of Power, the helm of the State.—[Amicus.

Toast 6.—Deseret, alias Utah. May she be like the cities of refuge, a place of safety r the honest and oppressed of all nations. -[Antonio

Toast 7.—The Land we Live in.—[Judge.

Toast 8.—The Great Basin. Like our ishes to-night, may it ever be filled with enty; and like the present company, with miles of cheerfulness and happiness, and time of washing, may we all have a hand m.—[Amicus.

Toast 9.—The Merchantmen of Kanesville. Whose industry, enterprise, and business act, have made our Town the pride of WESTERN IOWA.—[Veritas.

Toast 10.—Doctor John M. Bernhisel. May his posterity be more numerous, and s well filled with knowledge as the Volmes of the Library he has been so indefagable in selecting.—[Amicus.

Toast 11.—Utah.—

May her Sons be statesmen, united and free,
Her daughters as lovely as any can be;
The Governor's righteous, her Exactor's peace,
Her Ministers founder of FLOCKS, than of FLEECE.
Her schools quite unequaled, her teachers none such,
Her children, in science, wise as English or Scotch.
Her soil, climate, valley, baths, minerals and lakes,
Inferior to none, throughout the old States;
Her Sons strong and willing, her Maids full of hope,
Her Governor more potent, than King, Duke or Pope.
Her Representatives and Senators, wise in their stations;
May her Ensign soon float the wonder of Nations.
—Sirphonos.

Toast 12.—Deseret. The Bee Hive, Industry and Economy. May we yet see many such nights as this, within the Great Salt Lake, and enjoy the benign influence shed forth from the Volumes of the "LIBRARY."—[Evermont.

Toast 13.—Uncle Sam. Our Country, Commerce and Policy. The wonder of Nations,—the terror of kingdoms, and the platform of Liberty and Freedom.—[Orient.

After Toast 1st, Mr. Bernhisel arose and replied, giving a sketch and synopsis of his journey east, and his labors while in the Eastern States; and also his labors and course at Washington City, with great celerity and ease, manifesting a deep and strong mind, and a forethought seldom equaled. He rehearsed with much exactness the proceedings of Congress of 1849, his course in getting up the Library for which he was Agent.

After dwelling upon these varied subjects he took his seat amid shouts of applause, and the harmonious sounds vibrating from the band of music in attendance.

After the second toast was read, Mr. Hyde was called upon to speak, to which he replied in a very brief manner eulogizing on the uprightness, and persevering character of the Doctor; also, on the good, generous, and liberal feelings extended towards the same by the inhabitants of Kanesville.

Judge Sloan, and Hon. H. W. Miller followed, congratulating the Doctor on his arrival at this place, and for the privilege enjoyed on the present occasion of sitting at the table with him, and sharing of the bounties of the liberal and generous inhabitants of this Town and County. To enumerate all that spoke, and the subjects treated upon we consider superfluous, as the whole company had something to say, and all spoke freely.

Mr. Carey stated: (a Citizen not a Mormon,) that his friends tried to prevail upon him not to go to Kanesville, as the Mormons were in the habit of doing away with people who came among them, that were not of them, but to the contrary he could say that he had been in Philadelphia and New York, at suppers and parties, and never enjoyed himself better than he had in Kanesville, and specially on the present occasion, there is plenty to eat, and neatly served up, &c., and plenty of warm friends around, taking no cognizance of eitheir party or creed, and liberally extending the hand of fellowship, freedom, and friendship to each other upon the broad basis of American liberality, and constitutional policy.

During the evening, kind regards were repeatedly tendered to the efficient managers who got up the supper; and to their credit, and the credit of the company we would say, that we never saw either at home or abroad, a more open, generous, and liberal expression, than that manifested by all on this occasion.

DANIEL MACKINTOSH.

Fires at Savannah, Mo.

On Saturday morning the 19th inst., between twelve and one o'clock, a fire broke out in the store of Messrs. Clarks & Howard, which destroyed the store and entire stock; Dr. McDonald's Drugstore and stock of Drugs and Medicines, and three or four adjoining buildings. Clarks and Howard's stock was valued at between $9,000 and $10,000, and insured by the Columbus, (Ohio,) Insurance Company, St. Joseph Agency, for $5,000. Dr. McDonald's loss in stock and building estimated at $2,000—no insurance. The other buildings valued at $1000, no insurance. The Postoffice was kept in Dr. McDonald's store, the letters and papers for Savannah was saved, the mail bags and contents for the north and west and for the south and east were destroyed.

On Monday morning the 21st, about the same hour, fire was discovered in the building occupied by Messrs. C. N. Worthington & Co., which destroyed the store and an adjoinining building. Worthington & Co's stock valued at between $4,000 and $5,000 was destroyed, except some $500. They had insurance by the Columbus (Ohio,) Insurance Company, St. Joseph agency, for $3,000. The buildings valued at about $2,000—no insurance.

There can be no doubt but these fires were set by an incendiary.—St. Jo. Adventure.

News! News!!

The Miner's Express of last week contains the following, which is as base a slander on the Hon. D. F. Miller, as could well be penned:—

By a letter received from Washington City, we learn that the River and Harbor Bill which passed the Senate, and which contained appropriations for our Harbor, and for the improvement of the Rapids, was opposed by Hon. Dan. Miller, on account of the appropriation of $20,000 for the Harbor at Dubuque. This is what our Whig friends have gained in the success of Dan. Miller.

The same letter informs us, that an item of nearly $11,000 was included in the Civil Diplomatic Bill, which passed the Senate, for defraying the expenses of running the boundary line between Iowa and Missouri. This item was objected to in the House of Representatives by Mr. Hall, of Missouri, and thereupon the House objected. A committee of conference was appointed, but for want of time it was lost. Had there been sufficient time left for consideration of the subject, the House would probably have agreed, though it is fair to presume that Dan. Miller would also have opposed that appropriation.

A more palpable mistatement could not be made. The River and Harbor Bill did not pass the Senate, in consequence of the hostility to it of Messrs. Cass, Dickinson, Douglas & Co. No man in Congress did more to promote the passage of this very bill than the Hon. D. F. Miller, who is accused by the correspondent of the Express of attempting to defeat. Oh, shame where is thy blush!—[Hawk Eye.

POETRY.

Woman's Power.

BY FRANK J. WALTERS.

Oh! tell me not that woman's weak,
Inconstant, or unkind;
Though flippant writers often speak
As though dame Nature's master freak
Was moulding woman's mind.

Around the suffer's lowly bed,
When pills the heart of men;
When science fails and hope is fled,
And helpless lies the dying head,
Oh! who is constant then?

Who watches, with a tireless eye,
The faintly heaving breath?
Who hovers round forever nigh,
To catch the last expiring sigh,
And soothe the pangs of death?

When disappointment sink the soul,
And round us troubles throng;
When grief exerts its wild control,
And sorrow's stormy billows roll,
Then, then, Oh! who is strong.

Man sinks beneath misfortune's blow,
And hope forsakes his breast:
His boasted powers are all laid low,
His strength is swallowed up in woe,
When not by woman blest.

But she can cheer his drooping heart,
And rouse his soul again,
Can bid his cankering cares depart,
And, by her smiling, artless art,
Can soothe his keenest pain.

Is woman weak? Go ask the sword,
The weapon of the brave,—
Whose look, whose tone, whose lightest word,
Though e'en but in a whisper heard,
Commands it as her slave.

Go ask man's wild and restless heart
Who can its passions quell;
Who can withdraw hate's venomed dart,
Bid malice and revenge depart,
And virtue in it dwell.

If woman's weak, then what is strong?
For all things bow to her:
To her man's powers all belong,
For her the bard attunes his song,
Her truest worshipper.

Woman, a tearful power is thine,
The mission to thee given,
Requires a strength almost divine,
A bosom that is virtue's shrine,
A soul allied to heaven.

MISCELLANY.

THE PRESIDENCY.

We observe, in the leading Democratic journals, a suggestion of the importance of withholding expressions in favor of named candidates for the Presidency, by the public press or in public resolutions, until the National Democratic Convention. These expressions, they argue with much reason, are too often uttered by men who from selfish motives, desire to acquire prominence as the early friends of a candidate, regardless of the obstacles which are thus thrown in the way of party success, and of the jealousies and factious divisions which they excite in the ranks of a triumphant cause. It is well sometimes to learn from the tuition of our adversaries; and the suggestion to which we refer naturally leads to reflections as applicable to the Whig party as to the Opposition.

Early in 1839 a discussion had arisen in the Whig journals, as to the relative merits of three gentlemen who had been named by their friends as candidates for the Presidency. Into that discussion the Boston Atlas had entered with some zeal, until it was satisfied that the distraction it was exciting among our friends was likely to be fatal to the Whig cause. Thus persuaded, the Atlas receded from its position, proposed to terminate the contention, and suggested to its Whig friends everywhere the propriety of persuing a similar course. "Let us postpone the discussion," said that leading and influential journal, "wait the decision of the National Convention, and sustain the nomination when made with whatever of zeal or ability we can bring to its aid. Discussion leads almost necessarily to retort and invective; and thus the wretched spectacle is presented of a great party suffering itself to be agitated and torn by intestine strifes, instead of directing its undivided and unbroken strength against the common enemy. So soon as the foe perceives that we are united, not to be again divided, his hands will be palsied, and we can go forth conquering and to conquer."

To this suggestion the Whig press in all quarters responded with patriotic alacrity. "We cordially respond," said the New York Courier and Enquirer, "to the sentiments thus reflectingly and patriotically expressed. They fully accord with the views we have uniformly taken of the subject, and will meet with universal favor in all ranks of the party We have, ourselves, scrupulously abstained from the agitation of this exciting question, in the full conviction that every Whig press should hold itself in a position to render its most efficient support to the nominee of the Whig Convention — whether that nominee should be Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, or General Harrison. We are persuaded that the friends of each of the candidates, however urgently they may have desired a different course, will be ultimately convinced that we have maintained the position of all others best calculated to advance the interests of the great cause."

The policy here recommended was acquiesced in by the Whig party, and the result of the impending Presidential election demonstrated its wisdom, in the triumphant success of General Harrison.

In our judgment these sentiments are as wise and as applicable now as they were in 1839. It has been, therefore, with regret, that we have observed the premature introduction of the Presidential question into the newspapers. True it is that the journals run up their respective flags with the proviso that they hold their preferences in subordination to the decision of a National Convention—but even this saving clause cannot obviate the just objections to the expression of any preferences at this time. They are unpropitious to that spirit of harmony and conciliation which ought to prevail in the Whig ranks. They disturb the unity of sentiment and action which is the strength of a party and of a cause. They engender rivalry and contention, stimulate and keep alive factions, and tend to prevent that ultimate heartiness and cordiality of co-operation which are the only guarantees of success. They embarrass Whig administration. They interfere with the legislation of Congress, and are fatal to measures of the greatest interest and importance to the country.

We think that with the exercise of ordinary prudence and patriotism the Whigs will be able to elect the candidate of their convention; but we think, also, that any attempt to forestall opinion and to create antecedent combinations will be fatal to the nominee and the Whig party. The administration is strong in the confidence of the country. It is strong in the Whig policy, which it has frankly proclaimed, and to which it has unflinchingly adhered. It is strong in the prudence, tranquility, dignity, and impartial justice with which it has executed the laws in all sections of the Republic. It is strong in the wise liberality of its foreign policy commending it to the sympathizing millions who have found a home in our land. It is strong in the divisions of the Oppositon, and in that fanaticism of antagonist factions which drives good men everywhere to combine in the cause of the Constitution and the Union. This strength is not the strength of the President, or of any member of the Administration; it is the strength of the great Whig leaders, who have cordially adopted and generously sustained the policy which they have indicated in their state papers and official acts; it is the strength of the great Whig party, to whose service their lives have been devoted, and whose measures and policy they believe to be approved and cherished by a large majority of the American People.

Such being our view of the position and prospects of the Whig Administration and the Whig party, we cannot but regard it as the policy of good Whigs in all quarters to keep the party so united that it may be prepared to advance in an unbroken phalanx in the cause of the nominee of the Whig National Convention. This can only be accomplished by keeping personal preferences and prejudices in subordination to the great Whig cause. It can only be accomplished by substituting, to some extent, for the untrammelled, partisan, roving warfare which the Whigs have been accustomed to in opposition, the stern, steady, and organized movement which can alone insure the successful issue of a battle of Opinion. We do not, of course, claim even for a Whig Administration an unreflecting subserviency; but we have a right, as whigs, to claim for it from whigs, such a generous and confiding acquiescence in its policy as will unite the party upon a common platform, and secure such reasonable concurrence as is indispensable to political success. There cannot be a party with an hundred heads. The Whigs cannot receive their direction from local cabals, and hope to triumph in a national conflict. "It is only by keeping my force entire," wrote Napoleon to the directory that would divide his army, "that I have been able to gain so many battles and to be now in Milan. You had better have one bad General than two Goods ones."

For our own part, we have no wish but for Whig success. We have no desire, directly or indirectly, to espouse the cause or to promote or discourage the views or aspirations of any candidate. We have no personal predilections or prejudices that we are not ready to sacrifice to the expressed will of a majority of the Whig party. We desire only to remain in a position, in common with our Whig brethren throughout the country, from which we shall be best able to work together to promote the advancement of that Presidential candidate whom the whigs may select in National Convention. And we think that this end may be most surely attained by the practice of a little abstinence and self-denial in discussing the claims and merits of individuals. We can insure success only by postponing the Candidates to the cause.—[Republic.

Fidelity.

Never forsake a friend. When enemies gather round—when sickness falls on the heart—when the world is dark and cheerless—is the time to try true friendship. The heart that has been touched will redouble its efforts; when the friend is sad or in trouble. Adversity tries true friendship. They who turn from the scene of distress betray their hypocrisy and prove that interest only moves them. If you have a friend who loves you—who have studied your interest and happiness, be sure you sustain him in adversity. Let him feel that his former kindness is appreciated, that his love was not thrown away. Real fidelity may be rare, but exists in the heart. Who has not seen and felt its power! They only deny its worth and power who have never either loved a friend or labored to make him happy. The good and kind, the affectionate and virtuous, see and feel the heavenly principle—They would sacrifice wealth and happiness to promote the happiness of others, and in return they receive the reward of their love by sympathizing hearts and countless favors, when they have been brought low by distress and adversity.

The foliowing is from the South Bend Register, by Schuyler Colfax, who was a member of our late convention, and is now spoken of as the Whig candidate for Congress in his district. We hope he will go to Congress as sure as Mary Ann's recipe will cure that eruptive plague.—[Terre Haute Express.

Cure for Erysipelas.

Mrs. Mary Ann Petit, of Penn Township, has furnished us the following recipe for Erysipelas, which, she assures us, she has never known to fail in any instance where it has been used in the early stages of the disease.

Take a quantity of Sassafras bark from the root—boil it well—add weak lye—drain off the the liquid—thicken it with wheat bran, (or shorts, if bran cannot be had,) making a poultice of it and apply to the parts affected, renewing it as often as it becomes dry. While using it, in the water that the patient may desire to drink, add a piece of saltpetre the size of a pea to a pint of water.

Hints to Schoolmasters.

Under this head a correspondent of the Advertiser has the following remarks, which are well worthy of attention.

"Be not sarcastic. Some teachers have a natural tendency to say things which cut through a boy's heart like a knife. A scholar makes some mistake, instead of a simple reproof, comes a tone of redicule. The boy feels wronged. One is stung into revengeful passion, another crushed with despair. I do not think a child should be mimicked, even for a drawling tone, without explaining before hand that it is not for redicule, but to show in what the fault consists; while the scorching sarcasm which some teachers use, should be wholly abolished. It tends to call up bad passions, and engender bad feelings in the child's mind towards the teacher and all that he does.

"A teacher, in order that he may exert a moral and spiritual influence, should be familiar and gentle. There is, no doubt, a dignity that is essential in a school room, but it need not partake of arrogance. True dignity must always be attended with simplicity. Children are keen observers, and they either shrink from artificial austerity, or smile at it as absurd. A teacher who would walk about his school with a domineering manner, might talk about moral and spiritual truth until he was weary and do little good. To produce much good, a teacher must win the love and confidence of the children; and to do this, he should, in his manners, be natural and gentle.

"So with the tone of the voice. If a teacher is sharp and crabbed in his speech, if he calls out with dogmatical authority, he shuts up the very hearts of the scholars, and the spell is broken; they will not listen to the voice of the charmer, charm he never so wisely.

"A subdued manner, and a low, kind tone, will work wonders. Some always speak in the imperative mood. 'Fifth boy, second division, bring your book this way.' Another says: 'Master A——, will you bring me your book?'

"Now both boys know they are to obey; but one does with some degree of scorn what the other does cheerfully. Who would not rather be asked than ordered!"

MIND.

BY WILLIAM LEGGETT.

Let others praise the hue
That mantles on thy face,
Thine eyes of heavenly blue,
And mien of fruitless grace—
These charms I freely own,
But still a higher find;
'Twill last when beauty's flown—
Thy matchless charm of mind.

The damp of years may quench
The brightness of thine eye!
Time's icy hand may blanch
Thy cheek's vermillion dye;
Thy ferm may lose its grace,
Thy voice its sweet control;
But nought can e'er efface
The beauties of thy soul.

What's beauty but a flower
That blooms in summer's ray;
When pours the wintry shower,
Its charms will fade away;
The mind's a rich perfume,
The winter cannot chill;
The flower may lose its b'oom,
But fragrance lingers still.

Stars gem the vault of heaven,
When day's last hues decline;
As darker grows the even,
With brighter ray they shine—
Thus in the night of years,
When youth's gay light is o'er.
More bright the soul appears
Than e'er it shone before.

The leaves when autumn blusters,
Forsake the tree and die.
But falling show rich clusters,
Of fruitage to the eye;
Thus time, in flying, snatches
Thy beauty, but displays
One charm that all o'ermatches—
A soul that ne'er decays.

Influence of the Sun.

The Sun's rays, says Herschel, are the ultimate source of almost every motion which takes place on the earth's surface. By their heat are produced all winds. By their vivifying action vegetables are elaborated from inorganic matter, and become in turn the food of animals and man, and the sources of those great deposits laid up for human use in the coal stratagem. By them the waters of the sea are made to circulate in vapors through the air, and irrigate the land, producing springs and rivers; and by them are produced all disturbances of the chemical equilibrium of the elements of nature, which by a series of compositions and decompositions, give rise to new products and originate a transfer of materials.

HALIFAX, March 28.

The official letters from the Nova Scotia Railway delegates have not yet been made public, but the Halifax Sun, says: "We have, on the most reliable authority, the gratifying news that the whole affair of the railroad has been settled by the mission of the Hon. Mr. How. The whole amount necessary to build the road to Montreal and Quebec has been obtained at 3½ per cent. The local Provincial Governments have power to connect with any branch of the railroad to American territory.

The Printer.

Many men who have acquired great fame and celebrity in the world, began their career as printers. Sir William Blackstone, the learned commentator on Laws, was a printer by trade. King George III learned the art, and frequently set type after he ascended the throne of England. We scarcely need mention Franklin, for it is well known to all who are familiar with his name, that he was a printer. Alexander Campbell, the greatest Theologian that ever lived, is a printer. Gentlemen of the "Craft," these are gratifying facts; but let us not be content that they may alone be held up to the credit of the profession—let us honor ourselves, and do all we can to keep up, and elevate still higher, the character of our beautiful art.

A Cooler on Love.

"You have stolen my soul, divine one!" exclaimed Mr Stickly to Miss Sensible.

"Pardon me," responded the lady, "I am not in the habit of picking up little things."

WHY DO YOU GATHER?

BY G. F. A. SPILLER.

When I have been elucidating the principles of gathering in these the last days to the mountains of Ephrahim, I have been looked upon with surprise, and as a man of unsound mind; "to think so little of the power of God." Say they, "my friend, God is all-powerful, he can save you as well here as anywhere else; there is no need of gathering, only have the grace of God in you, and you are are all right." There is not the least doubt that the Lord can do many things that he will never do, but one thing is certain, what the Lord commands we must obey. Probably the antediluvians reasoned with themselves like this, "the Lord is all-powerful, he can save out of an ark as well as in one; besides, there is no appearance of a deluge;" and I have no doubt that the warning was at last not taken notice of, as it had been preached so long. But, say the sectarians, "ought not Noah's building the Ark to have convinced the people of the verity of his message?" I would say in reply, ought not the gathering of so many thousands of Latter-day Saints to verify the message of Joseph Smith, and prove to a demonstration that he was a prophet sent of God, to deliver those that would yield to the mandates of heaven? But let us look at Noah again; Noah went into the Ark with the rest that were to go in; and then the heavens opened, and the rain descended, and destroyed all that were on the earth: we find that God did not exert his all-powerful influence to save the disobedient. Lot could have said, the Lord can save me here as well as if I went away and left part of my family behind; besides, there are no signs of fire, and the people are rejoicing, and are merry; but Lot knew the Lord better, and did not reason with the angels what the Lord could or ought to do; it was not his plan to spiritualize the Lord's commands, but to obey them; and we read what an awful predicament he would have been in had he disobeyed, for as soon as he entered Zoar, down came the fire and consumed the cities. As it was in the days of Noah and Lot, so shall it be at the second coming of Christ; few will believe the message of these sent forth to proclaim deliverance to the people, they will treat them with contempt; only a "few will be saved."

"Why do you gather?" Because God has commanded all his people to come out of Babylon, "that they should not be partakers of her sins, and that they should not receive of her plagues." For the Lord of Hosts has even determained a consumption upon the whole earth, and we, like Lot and the disciples of Christ, must flee to the mountains for safety, as the Lord has commanded; there to be hid in the hollow of His hand until the fury of His indignation is overpast. That the earth may be purified, "for such as be blessed of Him shall inherit the earth, and they that be cursed of Him shall be cut off." We leave our native land because of the strife, hypocrisy, and confusion that are among those who profess to wear the garb of religion. If we read the journals of this land of tract societies and Bibles, we find them complaining of the "brutal assaults" and "horrible outrages" committed by "audacious brutes, violent passengers," and "notorious ruffians," and of many, who, while reposing in "tir'd nature's sweet restorer—balmy sleep," find in the morning that a noctural visitor has entered the house and has made a clearance of all the "precious things," by an "extensive robbery or burglary." See the deception of man towards man by "illegal weights and measures." And, as a specimen of white slavery and oppression, I would call attention to the following extract which appeared in the "Times" some time back. "Alleged case of slave driving in England. On Wednesday last, we were coming from Yorkshire to London, and during the time we were stopping at the Salford station we observed a number of young women employed in clearing the weeds from a field on the north side of the Station, and a man overlooking them, who held in his hand a large stick. Our attention was attracted to the man overlooking them from the resemblance, which, more than one person remarked, he bore to a slave driver, although, the remark was made that of course he would never think of using the stick to compel application to work. Judge what was our astonishment when we actually saw the man beat one of the girls for neglect of work, and that so severely, that the poor creature fairly winced under the infliction. We could scarcely believe the evidence of our own eyes, that such means of compelling women to labor were used in our country—A number of spectators." Go into the factories and fields, and witness the hard labors of men, women, and children, for very scanty wages, ill or well they must work or starve; and is not this white slavery? Yes! There it exist palpable and real, and we may view numbers of our fellow-creatures dwindling into deformity, and pining into old age, before, by right, they should have arrived at maturity. Go down our narrow alleys and courts and enter the houses, see the rooms inhabited by more than one family, separated by no other demarcation than a chalk mark on the floor; see them want food; they are in bad health; they are ragged, filthy, and debased; the most cruel wants, the most unexampled privations drive them to crime and wickedness, their time is wasted in drunkenness and noctural revels, all social ties are forgotten; the man forgets he is an husband and a father, the woman forgets she is a wife and a mother. Love has fled, and discord and sensuality reign in its stead. Contemplate for one moment, and let us ask the question, is this pleasing in the sight of God? Did it please the Lord to let the Israelites suffer under the Egyptian bondage? No! He came down and delivered them out of the Egyptians' yoke; for He had "seen their affliction and oppression." He sent a man, even Moses, to bring them into a precious land. And God is the same to-day as He was in the day of Moses; the same God of Israel still lives, and has looked down from heaven, and has seen our affliction and oppression. He has heard the widow's and orphan's cries. The time has come for the gathering of all nations; therefore, the Lord has called forth a man, even Joseph Smith, and endowed him with power and authority to proclaim deliverance to the people, they that will obey and gather together, that they may be prepared for the coming of the Lord. Many that toil under the heavy yoke of oppression have obeyed the warning voice of the prophet, and are now rejoicing in the glorious truths of heaven, "fearless of the tyrants rod." The signs of the times are a clear index of what is shortly to come to pass, and proclaim the near approach of the Lord. "Men's hearts are failing them for fear," as will be seen from the following extract. "The doom of our world. What this change is to to be we dare not even conjecture, but we see in the heavens themselves some traces of destructive elements and some indication of their power. The fragments of broken planets—the descent of meteoric stones upon our globe—the wheeling comets welding their loose materials at the solar furnace—the volcanic eruptions in our own satellite—the appearance of new stars, and the disappearance of others—are all foreshadows of that impending convulsion to which the system of the world is doomed. Thus placed on a planet which is to be burnt up, and under heavens which are to pass away; thus treading, as it were, on the cemeteries, and dwelling upon the mausoleums of former worlds, let us learn the lesson of humility and wisdom, if we have not already been taught it in the school of revelations."—[North British Review.

Mark the contrast between the plebian and he that rests in the lap of pleasure, who is surrounded with wealth and luxury, he thinks of nothing else but his will, heart, and passions; he passes by the plebian without recognizing him as a brother, yet they both come into the world naked, yet they are the offsprings of God; but they have been taught that it was the Lord's wish that one should be rich, the other poor; one to oppress, the other to bow to his rod. My soul sickens at the sight; well may God say, "Come out of her my people;" she has indeed oppressed and trodden under foot the poor; but deliverance has come for the honest in heart, to go to the mountains of Ephraim to be free from bondage and oppression. Oh, Babylon! when I contrast thy present greatness with what will befall thee; when I contemplate thy ruins I feel to exclaim in the language of the prophet, "This is the rejoicing city, that dwelt carelessly, that said in her heart, I am, and there is none besides me; how she is become a desolation:" "She obeyed not the voice; she trusted not in the Lord; she drew not near to God: her princes within her are roaring lions, her priests have polluted the sanctuary," surely "there is neither beauty nor utility within her borders." And yet with these plain facts before us I am asked the question, "why do you gather?" I would still reply, we cannot worship our God here unmolested, for "the wicked have drawn the sword to cast down the poor and needy, and to stay such as be of upright conversation." But in Zion, "none shall make us afraid;" there we may serve our God in peace and security, and bask in the sweet smiles of love and liberty. Why did Abraham leave his home not knowing whither he went? because God had commanded him to do so, and for this reason do the faithful Saints gather, or would gather, if it were in their power to do so. None that are faithful will hesitate, but will be up and doing the work of the Lord. How cheering must it have been to the poor Saints whose only comfort was, Hope; how their fears and doubts must have fled, when their anxiety to know how they should gather, ceased; their hearts been made light, and their minds relieved, when they heard that the "Perpetual Emigrating Fund" had begun, that it would soon take thousands to the promised land! With what pleasure will the poor Saints put their mites together to swell this Fund; truly, many can help one, and as we are all waiting for deliverance, let us not be ashamed to put in our mites; but do so boldly, knowing that God knows when we do our best, and that we shall be rewarded for the same; and inasmuch as we do put our shoulder to the wheel of this Fund, to accelerate its speed by our little, the sooner we shall be gathered into the garner from the approaching storm. Then shall there be rejoicings on the mountains of Ephraim, where the pure and the just ones are assembled; where truth, love, and liberty's banner is unfurled; where you can learn the sacred principles of salvation and exaltation, and be edified with the good things of heaven. Then will the good time that has been so long anticipated be enjoyed, and those that wish to be participators in those good things must be steadfast and obedient; therefore "watch and pray," that you may be ready, and not be found wanting; but with your lamps trimmed, and with pure oil in them.

In times of national disorder, great men rise to the summit of affairs as certainly as the large lumps come to the top when you shake a sugar-bowl.

Latest from Denmark.

The following extracts we copied from a letter handed to us by Z. Snow, Associate Judge of the Territory of Utah; and believing it might be of some interest to the Saints, we cheerfully give it a place in our columns:

96 NORRESGADE, COPENHAGEN,
DENMARK, Feb. 14th, 1851.

BROTHER ZERUBABLE AND SISTER MARY:—I have received through Elder Pratt, the letters you sent him to be forwarded to me; and was very thankful for them, and perhaps you have expected an answer before now, but I have deferred writing as long as I thought I could in safety and have my letter reach you before you start for the Valley; and you will be able to carry a report of me up to this date, in case the letters which I sent by mail, fail to reach my family. I was very much pleased at the good spirit which was breathed in your letters, and particularly that you were so decided about going to that peaceful home of Saints early in the Spring.

Your appointment as Judge of the Supreme Court of Utah Territory, was from the Lord, though it come through the President, and will doubtless be a blessing unto you in a pecuniary point of view; and if you are wise in the use of it, may be a blessing unto many thousands.

My last date from Great Salt Lake City, was September 29th, which Elder Hyde brought over the plains, and mailed to me in Iowa. My Family, Mother, and Wilford's folks were all well, prosperous and happy. Br's William and Gardner Snow, and Winslor For. and families, were then within forty miles of their journey's end. I suppose the Valley news of a general nature you will have obtained from the papers; probable you will also see my letters in the "STAR" and learn a little how we prosper here.

This is a well fortified and pleasant City. The winter has been pleasant—but little snow; and about the temperature of New York. I have good health and a plenty of business, warm friends and a plenty of enemies.

This is a perfect Priest-ridden and King-ridden people, but many honest souls among them. We have had some persecution in this City (saying nothing of the flood of lies that always follow the truth,) such as breaking up our meetings, stoning houses and windows and the like, but not as much here as in some other places in the Kingdom.

Brother Dykes, who is now laboring in the province of Jutland, has had a hard time, and made some hair-breadth escapes from his enemies, but has been greatly blessed notwithstanding, and has baptized over fifty.

Brother John Forsgren, (whose persecution and expulsion from Sweden, I mentioned in my letter in the "Star,") has fared but little better in Denmark. He and a Danish brother was mobed and various maltreated lately in Roeskill, the Old Capitol of Denmark; and after two days complete uproar in the town, they were expelled by the chief authorities of the town against all law. Notwithstanding all these things we rejoice continually in the Lord our God, who blesses our labors and pours out the Holy Ghost upon us and the Saints, with its gifts and blessings, visions and dreams, prophecy and healing, casting out devils, &c. We have baptised about one hundred and fifteen in this City, and a good prospect. We are but miserable tools in the Danish language at the best, but the Lord makes weak things become strong unto them who believe.

Pray for us continually, that we may do a good work.

I am now very busily engaged with brother Hanson in translated and publishing the Book of Mormon; it is a very laborious and tedious work to get it issued clean and pure, according to the simplicity of the original; and requires the closes attention. I am publishing three hundred copies—have only one hundred and sixty-eight pages finished—it will take me till May or June—I circulate two hundred by the sheet weekly.

Fail not to write me before you leave the Bluffs, and as many times thereafter as you can. Write about everything you can think of pertaining to all the Saints and the Kingdom of God in all the world.

Direct all letters to No. 15, Wilton Street, Liverpool.

Sister Mary Le of good cheer; you can do all the Lord requires of you; arm yourself with patience. My love to the children. Peace be with you all. Amen.

Yours, &c. E. SNOW.

Naturalization—The requisite qualifications.

The following, says the Hartford Times, are the terms upon which foreigners can be admitted as citizens:

1. Five years residence in this country in all cases.

2. A declaration of intention to become a citizen must be made before a court of the United States, or a State court, or before a clerk thereof, at least two years before the application for citizenship. This is the general rule. The exceptions are as follows—(number 3 and 4.)

3. The minor son of a naturalized citizen, upon arriving at the age of 21 years, becomes a citizen by virtue of the citizenship of the father.

4. If the applicant for citizenship has resided in the United States five years, including the three years next preceding his arrival to the age of 21 years, he will be admitted a citizen without any previous declaration of intention.

5. Proof will be required when the naturalization papers are issued, that the applicant has recided in this country five years, and the evidence must come from a citizen of the United States under oath.

Mind.

BY G. W. C.

Oh! Mind! infinite quality of eternal essence!
How varied are the phases of thy sphere!
Art thou not the sacred archive of the Hearts most secret promptings—the
Treasury cell of memory's fond conceptions?
Alternate change hath ever marked thy long
Eventful history Susceptable of ever varying Transition, how much of good or evil, lies
Hid within the ideal tenement of thought!
The influence of truth, upon a mind not
Void of reason, Justice or Humanity, but fraught
With holy desire to benefit mankind, is not
Unlike the; results produced by Spring-time showers,
Which, by their fall, doth cause to germinate,
And grow, each tender plant.
Oh! how goodly an occupation doth mind
Fulfil, when reason and truth are both combined
Within, to answer the award of a high
And holy destiny.
Again, behold a mind urged on by passions
Unrelenting power, the elemental strife of
Waring world's let lose, like tornado storm which,
While as it rages in its terrific course, seems
Like the deathly harbinger of distress and woe!
Faint picture of a too often witness'd sad reality.
Mind's Mission—how potent! if truth but light the way,
Of mortals here, 't will guide the mind to the realms of day,
Where in a more extended sphere, its powers will increase,
For there all eternity is fraught with intelligence and peace.

St. Louis, April 15th, 1851.

True Social Dignity.

To be ashamed of their origin is just now in American Society, the weakness of the little minds that compose it. The man who rides in his carriage, shrinks from the acknowledgment that the money that enabled him to buy that carriage was earned by his father, dollar by dollar, with toil and patience, in a tan-yard, behind the counter of a shoemaker's or tailor's shop, or by honest industry in some other useful occupation, below (so called) the grade of the merchant or professional man; as if the man did not honor the work, and not the work the man.

To such let Daniel Webster speak. Hear him. "It did not happen to me to be born in a log cabin, but my elder brothers and sisters were born in a log cabin, raised among the snow drifts of New Hampshire, at a period so early that when the smoke first rose from its rude chimney, and curled over the frozen hill, there was no similar evidence of a white man's habitation between it and the settlements on the rivers of Canada. Its remains still exist—I make it annual visit. I carry my children to teach them the hardship endured by the generations that have gone before them. I love to dwell on the tender recollection, the kindred ties, the early affections, and the narrations and incidents, which mingle with all I know of this primitive family abode. I weep to think that none of those who inhabited it are now among the living, and if ever I fail in affectionate veneration for him who raised it, and defended it against savage violence and destruction, cherished all domestic virtues beneath its roof, and through the fire and blood of seven years, revolutionary war, shrunk from no toil, no sacrifice, to serve his country, and to raise his children to a condition better than his own, may my name, and the name of my posterity, be blotted forever from the memories of mankind?"

And we will add, that he who is ashamed of the poor father and mother, whose honest labors supported him through childhood, and whose daily toil was taxed to give him the education by which he has been enabled to rise to a condition above the one he occupied, is unworthy to be the associates of wise and good men. All such will despise him; and no matter how he may carry his head, he is nothing in the estimation of America's true noblemen.

Wife—Mistress—Lady.

The following is a true translation from the German:

Who marries from love takes a wife; who marries for the sake of convenience, takes a mistress; who marries from consideration takes a lady. You are loved by your wife, regarded by your mistress, tolerated by your lady. You have a wife for yourself, a mistress for your house and friends, a lady for the world. Your wife will agree with you, your mistress accommodate you, your lady will manage you. Your wife will take care of your household, your mistress of your house, your lady of appearances. If you are sick your wife will nurse you, your mistress visit you, and your lady will inquire after your health. You take a walk with your wife, a ride with your mistress, and join parties with your lady. Your wife will share your grief, your mistress your money, and your lady your debts. If you are dead your wife will shed tears, your mistress lament, and your lady wear mourning. A year after your death marries again your wife, in six months your mistress, and in six weeks or sooner, when morning is over, your lady.

South Carolina Secession.

The editor of the Columbia (S. C.) States' Rights Republican, in noticing the proceedings of a States' Rights Association, exclaims:

"The spirit of resistance is every day becoming stronger, and despite the misrepresentations of certain interested partues to the contrary, South Carolina was never more in earnest than she is at present, and we confidently anticipate that the result of the deliberations of the Charleston Convention will be a declaration, in unmistakable terms, that the hope of co-operation is delusive—that delays are dangerous, consequently, that separate State action is our only alternative, and that South Carolina must secede alone."

California Morality.

We find in the New York Express, of ... inst., a letter from their correspondent in California, dated the 1st of March, at San Jose, the seat of government, giving a most lamentable account of the debauched condition of both morals and politics in that State. If the following extract, which we take from that letter, will not have the effect of preventing any man of reputation or standing from emigrating to California; then we are at a loss to know what would:

The scenes of the past two weeks in the Convention have been infamous. Drunkenness has been the order of the day, and murder has not been avoided for want of arms, for more than one-half the members go armed. I have heard the President of the Senate, D.C. Broderick, tell a Senator in his seat that he was an arrant liar, to which the Senator retorted that the truth was not in the heart of this "Mose" of the Senate. Another Senator, a gallant Texan General, who married a widow with a "plum" at the City Hotel, a year or two since has bought his liquor by the cask, and kept it in his room free to all. Nay, more, he has in open Senate invited that body to adjourn to his room and drink oblivion to ill feelings caused by the excitement of the Senatorial election; and another Senator has risen in his place, and with a drunken tear in his eye and a maudlin voice, accepted his offer. Another Senator, a Whig, I am ashamed to say, has not breathed a sober breath in months.

The archives of this State are now packed up to be sent to Washington to the Land Office. This removal of the titles of the vast majority of landholders here has caused a great turmoil, and the transfer will be resisted, if need be, by force of arms. It is openly asserted that this removal is part of a great scheme of fraud in relation to the public lands, and that they will never reach Washington.

Utah Territory.

Yesterday, a number of gentlemen, connected with the Territorial Government of Utah, and the Indian Department in that quarter, Elder Pratt, and a number of Mormons, and several persons connected with the commerce of the Valley, left on the Robert Campbell, for Council Bluffs, en route for the Salt Lake.

A number of persons connected with the trade of Sante Fe and New Mexico left on the same boat.

The overland emigration to California this season will be small, but the number going out to Utah, Oregon, and New Mexico will be considerable. The largest portion will go to the Salt Lake. The great rush to that quarter is not confined to members of the Church of Latter-day Saints, but embraces men of various pursuits and professions. The time is near when the whole Valley of the Salt Lake, and base of the Rocy Mountains, will be closely settled by white men. Notwithstanding all that is said of the ruggedness and barrenness of much of that country, a population is pouring into it, the extent of which no one not familiar with of informed in regard to it, would believe; and which, in a few years, by its own aggregation if unaided by continuous accessions, would necessary spread over an immense territory.—[Republican.

Truth.

The power of truth is irresistable. We may run from it, but we cannot fight successfully against it. No one by resistance ever made the truth false. It is possible to resist the truth, or rather to turn aside from its influence, but it ever remains the still. Like God, the truth is eternal and unchangable. When truth is permitted to exert its hallowed power upon us, it is sure to benefit us, but when we strive to push it from us, we lose by the effort. Light is light; a man may close his eyes, or shut himself up in darkness, but all around him and in his hiding place, the light is still shining. Those who desire "not to walk in the light," are workers of evil; while those who wish to be governed by the truth seek it, earnestly and continually, and they may be thus governed. It is a bad sign to see men striving to get away from the truth, from whatever motive; "honesty is the best policy;" and we love to have all come to the light that, "their deeds may be made manifest, wether they are good or evil." Men who know they are doing wrong think to hide, by feigning ignorance, or making apologies, or excusing themselves, or other subterfuges of hypocrisy; but if they would let the truth have its way, they would soon be ashamed of themselves, and be led to abondon their evil way. The world is blessed with the light of the sun; but how are they wedded to error, and will cling to their idols! They seem to think the truth will suffer by their delinquency. Not so. It must increase, but they will be sure to decrease. However they may think on the subject, the friends, advocates, and lovers of truth, will come off "more than conquerors" in the end. "Truth must prevail."—Col. Fountain.

Beauty.

Let me see a female possessing the beauty of a meek and modest deportment—of an eye that bespeaks intelligence and purity within—of lips that speak no guile; let me see in her a kind, benevolent disposition, a heart that sympathizes with distress! and I will never ask for the beauty that dwells in rubby lips, or snowy hands, or the forty other et ceteras, upon which our poets have harped for so many ages. These fade, when touched by the hand of time; but the ever-enduring qualities of the heart shall outlive the reign of these, and grow brighter and fresher, as the ages of eternity roll away.

Speak well of your friend, of your enemy neither well or ill.

Indian Depredations Again.

Emigrants who encamp along, and near the River, we are told, make presents to the Indians,—feed them, &c., thus presenting to them the very inducements they most desire, to continue their rambling on this side. A few days ago, they killed a number of cattle, and cut out what beef they wanted and passed on. We know not whether they were emigrants' or citizens' cattle. If men will not hickory them out of the Country when they see them, we hope they will never complain to us if they kill all their cattle,—rob and plunder their houses and wagons. Emigrants should not feed them, neither suffer them to come about their camps on either side of the River. Their own safety depends upon it as well as the safety of the property of the citizens on this side. Some of them got a hickorying in town a short time since; and if they will use proper caution at all the ferries and not allow them to cross, and the citizens generally do their duty according to the resolutions of a Public Meeting for their protection, we shall not long be troubled with their depredations.

The Government Agents have all advised us to whip them and send them back when they come on this side: and when this advice is put in force, some persons are so very feeling and sympathetic for them that they feel almost like fighting in their behalf. If they would sympathize a little more with some poor widows whose last cow has been slaughtered by them, and several poor men whose entire team has been butchered by the red skins, they would manifest some sensible sympathy in the cause of justice, mercy and truth. Bad as it may seem, therefore, our only safety is to flog them away when they come, until they will learn not to shoot down cattle on the prairie. The Government Agents have repeatedly told us to do it, and our experience proves it to be necessary.

If emigrants steal the Indian's horses, kill their cattle, or molest them in any unlawful manner, then the Indians may, with propriety return the compliment of the hickory. All emigrants should be cautious, and commit as little trespass on Indian ground as possible. The Buffalo are mostly on the disputed or war ground between the Pawnees and Sioux;—and as no one tribe has any preemption there, emigrants may kill what meat they need in that region; but kill none to be wasted. The General Government has secured the right of way, by treaty stipulations, to all emigrants and travelers across their territory;—so, that by passing through, you are not trespassers, at all, on their grounds.

Those who were flogged and run out of this place a short time ago, were run from their camp on the same day a little while before, and forced into Musquito creek. Several beef hides lay about their camp, skeleton of animals, &c These same Indians exhibiting recommends, purporting to be signed by several of our Citizens, among whom was the name of Joseph Kelley, stating that they were good Indians, &c. We pronounce these recommends all a base forgery, so far as our Citizens are concerned. The Mormon community have suffered too much by them to give them any letters of recommendation.

Emigrants are free in this region, and will not be molested in any way we trust, yet we do not consider them free to interfere in our mode of discipline with the Indians which was recommended by the Government agents, and established by the unanimous vote of a public meeting held in this town by the Citizens of this Frontier county. If Emigrants are not disposed to profit by the experience of those who have lived among them, and near them for years, they may adopt their own modes of treatment when they get among them; but do not interfere with our mode here. When Emigrants have had the same experience that we have, and suffered the same that we have suffered, they will feel about as we do. But we are sorry to see men who profess love for this community, espouse, so warmly, the Indians' cause and secrete them! All they gain by their traffic with them in Moccasins, &c., will be like the canker and mildew upon their future prosperity, and not save them from a dishonorable close of their business. If men have so much disintrested benevolence for the Indians, just send them over a few beef cattle, a few sacks of flour, meal, &c. But do not induce them to come over this side by giving them protection.

Mr. Secretary Harris, with his lady, arrived in this Town by the steamer "Sacramento" on his way to Utah. He seems to be the right sort of a man for the Station, and well disposed towards the interests of that new Country and its inhabitants. His Honor, Judge Snow, with his family, is here, en route to his station in the Basin Country. He is an important limb of the Law, and every way qualified for his station in our opinion. Even handed justice is what the citizens may look for in that Country, under his judicial reign, associated with others equally able with himself.

Modest, familiar, and unassuming men, will find it much easier and more agreeable to get along in that Country, than those of a consequential and self-important air and bearing. The former class we are confident is going there; and we have no knowledge that the latter is going at all, to have any voice in the administration of the affairs of that Territory. In the hands of a wise, benevolent, and overruling Providence, our destinies are all placed: and every man in authority and power ought to act as much like God himself as his limited knowledge and abilities will allow him. "Be ye perfect, even as your father in heavan is perfect." And God's blessing and protecting care be upon all and over all who seek to be like unto him.

Emigration.

Just as despair began to hover about our farmers and merchants on account of the dull prospects of emigration to California and Oregon, and consequently, little or no sale for their commodities, the tide broke in upon us; and although the rush is not so great and overwhelming as it was last year,—yet a fair business is being done in produce, groceries, provisions, and in goods generally.

A great number is going to Oregon. They appear to be well fitted out, and generally respectable to all appearance. Some are bound for California, and many to the Valley of the Salt Lake. Thus are the western portions of the United States rapidly filling up with a hardy and enterprizing race of people. The emigration this year is of a different character from what it was last. They are not mere adventurers—to try their luck for a season and then return: but have their families along generally, showing that they go to the west to find permanent homes.

If "Uncle Sam" should gain some Territory in the Moon, we believe that the yankees would contrive some plan to emigrate to it, and hold it by actual possession. Success to enlargement and enterprize! The more territory that comes under the control of a generous and liberal government the less there is to groan and welter under despotism and aristocratic rule.

Land Warrants and Pre-emption Rights.

Under the act of 28th September, 1850, warrants can be located upon no land but that which was subject to entry before the 3d March, 1851. The late issue of warrants can be located upon improved lands. It is not required that an affidavit should be made, setting forth that "there is no settlement or cultivation" upon the land. Every person, then, living upon public lands now in market, is subject to be entered out at any time, by the holder of a land warrant, unless he file his declaratory statement as required by law, so as to secure his pre-emption right. This declaration should be filed not only in the District Land Office in the State, but also in the General Land Office in Washington City.

It is important to the settler that he take timely notice of these facts. If he is unable to enter his land, then within thirty days after making or commencing his improvements he should file his declaratory statement, as required by the pre-emption act of September 4, 1841.

Desperate Diseases, Sometimes Require Desperate Remedies.

Some graceless Scamp fired the Jail of this County, on Thursday night, 8th Inst., and it was entirely consumed. An ineffectual attempt was made a short time before to set it on fire. We know not who has done the deed; and therefore can give but this testimony to remind the guilty person that "He stands on slippery places, while fiery billows roll beneath." If he will pay for the Jail, or cause it to be done, within a reasonable time, well and good! If not, that guilty incendiary shall be burned to death by fire. In the name of the God of Israel we say it, and let all Israel say, AMEN!

Circuit Court.

On Monday 5th inst., the first regularly organized Circuit Court, was held in Pottawatamie County. Judge Sloan upon the Bench, assisted by Judge Snow, one of the associate judges of Utah Territory on his way to that Country. It really looked like civilization, once more to see a Circuit Court in full and successful operation. But little business was done, because there was not much to do. It was in session two days, and then adjourned.

South Carolina.

This State seems determined to secede from the Union. With her citizens, reason has lost its control: Madness and phrenzy appear to be their ruling passions. A misguided ambition will be very apt to lead them into the very vortex and thraldom which their imagination and fancy only, now convince them that they are in. "Whom the Gods intend to destroy, they first make mad."

Obituary.

Elder William Burton, President of the Dundee Conference, Scotland; died in Edinburgh, on the 18th of March, of intermittent fever.

Elder Burton passed through this place last summer from the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, accompanied by several other Elders belonging to the Church, who were on their way to Britain to preach the Gospel. From our own personal acquaintance with him, we can say that we esteemed him as a man of God, an Elder in Israel, a Saint, a Brother and a friend, and we believe that his name and memory, will long be held in honorable remembrance by all who knew him. He has left a wife in the Valley, to lament his death.

Peace to his ashes, to his spirit repose,
He's relieved from a sphere of trouble and woes;
His heavenly calling, deportment and faith,
Insure his salvation, and triumph o'er death.

Salt Lake Mail.

A Correspondent informs us, that no Mail had passed Fort Kearney from Salt Lake, since December last; and also states that the Mail for March en route for the Valley, went as far out as the Big Elkte, and in consequence of high water returned to Independence.

Phelp's train of twelve wagons, ten mules to each, passed the Fort on the 15th ult., with merchandise for Utah.

The April Mail for the Valley, passed the Fort on the 15th of last month, in charge of Mr. Phelps of Independence, Mo. The following named persons also passed for the North Platte River Bridge; William and T. Randell, with groceries and provisions for emigrants; J. B. Nichols, for Fort Laramie; Richards & Co., with provisions, &c.

Mr. Futs left Fort Laramie on the 10th March, for Salt Lake, with nine wagons loaded with Bacon.

Plenty of Buffalo within three hours ride of the Fort.

Arrival of Goods.

A fresh lot of Dried Apples, Raisins by the box, and a superior quality of Olive Oil for Church purposes, just received and for sale at the Guardian Office.

Periodicals.

We have before us the United States monthly Law Magazine Advertiser, published by John Livingston, 54 Wall Street. Kinne's Law Compendium, by Asa Kinne, Astor House; and the International Monthly Magazine, published by Stringer and Townsend, 222 Broadway, New York.

These works are very ably edited, and the mechanical part neatly executed. The first two should be in the hands of every lawyer, and the latter in every family library.

Estray.

A large bay mare was left here by some emigrants a few days ago who said she came to them about five miles below Keg Creek and followed them to this place. She is kept near this town; and information can be given of her upon enquiry at this office. Prove property, pay charges and take the animal away. She would probably have been taken over the Plains, had it not been for energetic interference.

Also a three year old mare, between a gray and clay bank, and also a blood bay mare, rather a fine animal, probably seven years old, were found tied in the willows under suspicious circumstances. Probably the work of some white or red Indians. The gray mare belongs to one Roxford who passed through this place a short time ago on his way to Oregon, and said that his son-in-law would be along after him and get the animal if she was found. She is found. But we have no clue to the owner of the blood bay animal.

When we take an interest in a public demonstration of respect to any persons, we do not send a representative, but go ourself. If we deem it unfitting to go in person, we deem it unfitting also to send a representative. We are not aware what we have done that could induce any one to place that kind of an estimate upon our character.

Men who are of age, are allowed to act for themselves, without the knowledge of a Guardian; and we know not by what authority the actions of others are ascribed to us. Though grateful for sentiments of good-will emanating from hearts devoted to sincerity, frankness, honesty and righteousness, we believe in avoiding, as far as practicable, that with which we are not pleased.

Arrived at Kanesville, on the 7th May, from Wayne County, Michigan; Dr. B. L. King, Foster Smith and Lady, Henry Cramer Lady and Child; Nelson Clump, James Palmer, James Lovely, Truman Ludd, Mathew Clark, Isaac McClarry, Ira Pate, Peter Seper, William Bucklin, J. K. Preston, J. W. Craff and C. Able; all bound for California and intend to cross the River on the 12th Inst. All well.

Departure.

Dr. John M. Bernhisel, the agent from Utah, Hon. A. W. Babbitt, her delegate and family, Mr. Secretary Harris and lady, His Honor Z. Snow and family, Capt. H. R. Day, and Stephen B. Rose, Esq., (the two latter, Indian Sub-Agents for Utah,) left this town with fine teams and outfits to wend their way over the plains to the place of their destination in the Valley of the Salt Lake.

May they have a safe and speedy journey over the Plains, and meet with a cordial reception from warm hearts when the toils of the trip are over. They were all in good health.

Claim Agency.

Mr. Thomas McKenzie, is appointed to attend upon Emigrants who arrive at, and wish to settle in this county. He is active, and will spare no pains to attend upon them, and he expects a reasonable compensation for his services. He may be found at his residence, or upon the Public Square, in Kanesville. Office at the Music Hall.

Wanted.

A good lad from sixteen to eighteen years old, who understands gardening, chopping wood, looking after horses, and other stock. A young man free from any bad or idle habits, and devoted to general usefulness, can find a steady home and a fair compensation for his service by applying at this office soon. One possessing not these qualifications need not apply.

Arrival.

Elders J. W. Cummings, C. Dunn, and William Moss, arrived here per steamer Sacramento, on Friday, May 2d, twenty days from St. Louis, with a company of two hundred English Saints, generally in good health and spirits; many of the company are destined for the Great Salt Lake Valley this season, the remainder will settle in Pottawamie. Elisabeth Bladen, one of the company, died of congestive fever coming up the River; her age is said to be nine years.

Valley Coin.

We have a few hundred dollars of the above money. It passes in the Salt Lake Country at par. Here there is a discount upon it. It belongs to the Poor Fund Emigrating Company. Now all the friends of the poor who go the Valley of the Salt Lake with money, may do a good deed to the poor without injury to themselves. Call at this office and exchange your money with us, and take the Valley Coin which is worth just the same there as United States Gold. Friends of the cause, do not forget this!

For the Guardian.

Mr. Editor: I ask a small space in the columns of your journal, to place myself beyond the misrepresentations which have gone out in regard to the course I pursued at a Public Supper, given in honor of the Delegate and Officers of Utah. It was currently reported that I was the representative of Elder Hyde at that place. I was the representative of no person or persons, but consider that I had the privilege of acting in such matters according to my own convictions of right and wrong. I took the responsibility of attending upon myself, and asked no other person to assume any for me. Also the remarks that I made at that place were mis-construed; what I said was in substance as follows: That I would like to honor those who deserve honor, but there was one present, who, from what I knew of him, I could not honor on this occasion; and hoped that the officers of Utah would conduct themselves in such a manner as would induce the citizens of Pottawatamie and Salt Lake, to bestow upon them greater honor than they were receiving at the present time.

The toast that I gave upon that occasion was said by some to have been so abusive towards the ladies that Mr. Babbitt raised a plate to throw at me, and would have done so, had not some lady interfered. But I leave the public to judge. It was verbatim as follows:

Orson Hyde, the protector of those who do right; the firm supporter of truth, and female virtue; and the denouncer of those who endeavor to build themselves up, by creating division among the Saints.

After the toast was given, a deadly silence prevailed, and perceiving that my presence annoyed some present, I retired.

To the officers of Utah, I have the kindest feelings, and to the managers who had the getting up of the affair, and especially to my most particular friend "Amicus." Yours, respectfully,

JOHN GOOCH, Jr.

Emigrants Attention.

The following extract from the Iowa Star of the 3d ult; contains good and wholesome advice to emigrants' who intend crossing the plains this season; we submit it for their consideration and benefit:

I would advise all who wish to come to California or Oregon to cross the Missouri River at Council Bluffs and keep the North side of the Platte River all the way, be sure and not cross at Fort Laramie, by so doing you will avoid the Black Hills, have better food for stock, save two days travel, and the expense of two ferries, the friends of the ferries will try to get you to cross, but be sure not to believe them. About 17 miles west of the South Pass the road forks, the right is Sublet's Cut-off, the left leads to Salt Lake. I believe there is not much difference between the Fort Hall road and the we Salt Lake road, but if you take the Salt Lake road be sure to take northern route from the Lake to the Humbolt, but look out for Indians. We went by Fort Hall and I think by what I can learn it is as good as any. I think I shall settle on the 4 creeks in the Tularrie Valley and I should like to have you for our neighbor once more.

Your old Friend, truly,
THOMAS BAKER.

Pension Law as Amended.

The following is the act of the last Congress explaining the acts of 7th July, 1838, March 3d, 1843, and June 17th, &c:

That the benefit of the acts of July 7th, 1838, granting pensions for one year, and of the act of June 17th, 1844, extending the act of March 3d, 1843, for the term of four years to certain widows, shall not be withheld from any widow whose husband died since the passage of either of said acts, if said widow shall be otherwise entitled to the same: Provided that no pension shall be granted to said widow for the same time her husband received one.

Approved March 3d, 1851.

A Mountain of Magnesia.

On Pitch (or Pitt) River, the principal affluent of the Sacramento, which flows through a charming Valley, and about five days journey from Goose Lake, there is a hill of pure Carbonate of Magnesia, 100 feet high. Much of it is perfectly white, while some is more or less discolored with iron, as if a painter had been trying to give effect by coloring light and shade. Large masses are easily detached, which, rolling down into the River that washes its base, float off as light and buoyant as a cork, until it becomes saturated with water. A thousand wagons could be loaded in a very short time, and there is enough to supply the whole world. For three days travel below, the soil seems to impregnated with it, and the banks of the River are formed of it. —[Pacific News.

Surgery.

Early this morning, Tuesday 13th, at this place, a son of Mr. Dooly Ruddle, an emigrant from Schuyler Co., Missouri, had his leg amputated above the knee. The operation was performed by Dr. Daniel Roberts in thirty-two seconds, assisted by Dr. Warren of this place. Dr. Roberts appears to be noted as a quick and successful operator in surgery,—is now on his way to the West; he is not a member of our Church, yet we hope he will find a home in the mountains among us.

In justice to the Doctor, and for the good of the public we copy the following from the Bloomington Gazette of December, etc.

A Quick Operation.

Mr. Love:—Recently we witnessed an amputation of a leg below the knee in what we term "double quick time." It was the limb of Mr. James Snider, on the Chariton, near Well's Mill, and the operation was performed by Dr. Daniel Roberts, in forty-four seconds, with complete success.

Dr. Roberts is a Physician who has many acquaintances in Missouri who have long and favorable known him in Illinois, as an ingenious and successful operator, and as standing deservedly pre-eminent in the practice of Medicine. We are proud that such a man has come among us.

To the Emigrating Public.

We as emigrants feeling it our duty, and also for the benefit of those intending to emigrate to the westward, to give our decision in favor of our present route; which has been to cross the Missouri River at Council Bluffs, (formerly Trading Point,) and also at the lower Ferry on the Elk Horn. We are perfectly satisfied with the ferries, roads, and also with the usage we have received from those connected therewith.

In order that none may be misled or deceived, we would say that the above ferries are owned and conducted by F. J. Wheeling & Co., gentlemen whose word can be relied upon. There is also plenty of wood, water and grass upon the route.

Rich Men in California.

The New Capitol of the State of California is called Vallejo, the proprietor of which has stipulated to build a State House and make other improvements in consequence of its being located there. Security was received for the execution of the contract and the bond was signed by the following persons, who testified to their wealth, after all debts were paid: Moriano G. Vallejo, $1,000,000; John B. Frisbie, $75,000; Salvador Vallejo, $250,000; James M. Estell, $60,000. The public buildings are to be immediately erected.

The candidates for Senator in California, kept open house, while the canvass was going on. There was an abundance of whisky to drink, and one letter says that the meeting of the Convention was adjourned one day, in consequence of one of the members having been drugged.

OFFICIAL.

Department of the Interior,
Pension Office, April 18, 1851.

The following rules and regulations, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, will be observed in the settlement of pension claims against the Government:

1. An agent or attorney asking to examine papers filed in any pension claim or for the reconsideration of a claim heretofore adjudicated, must produce a power of attorney giving him the necessary authority to act as agent of the claim, which power of attorney must be acknowledged before a justice of the peace or other person qualified to take acknowledgments or administer oaths, must be certified under a recognised official seal. The party moreover executing such power must have taken an oath that he or she is directly interested as one of the claimants, and a certificate to that effect must accompany the power.

2. On the presentation of such authority the Commissioner will in his discretion furnish an abstract of the proofs appearing in the papers filed, or permit a personal inspection of such papers.

3. Upon the presentation of the power, as required in the first rule, if it appear that the original party performing the alleged service, or his widow, is the applicant for the reconsideration of a claim heretofore adjudicated, such claim may be re-examined as a matter of right, but there shall not be more than two re-examinations, without the production of further material evidence.

4. In other cases than those of the person performing service or his widow, as prescribed in the 3d rule next preceding, no pension case which has been finally adjudicated shall be re-opened, unless on the production of satisfactory proof that the adjudication was erronous, accompanied by an affidavit of the party applying therefor, showing that such proof has been discovered since the adjudication was made.

5. Appeals may be taken from the decisions of the Commissioner of Pensions within six months from the time the decision is made and communicated to the party or his agent.

6. No application for a rehearing will be entertained after the expiration of two years from the final adjudication of a claim and notice thereof to the applicant or his agent. After that time the party will be left to seek redress by an appeal to Congress.

J. E. HEATH,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Boston, April 17, 7 P. M.

We were yesterday visited by a most terrible storm and gale. The wharves are nearly all overflowed. The cellars of the Custom House on Long Wharf are completely inundated, and the destruction of property thereby immense. The flats at East and South Boston are covered with water. The rails, in a number of places, on the Housatonic Railroad, had been washed off and the embankments carried away. The track on Worcester Railroad, is undermined beyond the dam. The Eastern Railroad is also badly injured in many places. The new Episcopal Church is so seriously damaged that it will have to be rebuilt. This is the highest tide ever known to have occurred in Boston. The steeple of the Baptist Church at Charlestown has been blown down, Mr. Theodore Locke, passing at the time, was killed. A schooner is reported to have been wrecked on Chelsea beach, and all on board are supposed to have perished. It is impossible at this time to give an estimate of the loss, but it very heavy.

A riot between Orangemen and Catholics has taken place in Renfrew County, Canada W., owing to the appointment of Mr. William Harris, former editor of the Packet, to be Crown Land Agent; there was some blood shed.

From California.

Intelligence has been received from San Francisco, up to the 13th ult. The robberies which excited so much attention on the Isthmus have been followed up by a number of others. Chagres, at last accounts, the Isthmus fever was prevailing to a considerable extent.

The citizens of California despairing of securing justice by the regular court of law, which have hitherto been but a mockery, have at length cast aside restraint and adopted the fearful alternative of dispensing justice or, rather, punishment upon supposed offenders. Jas. Burton, of Tennesse, and Charles Simmonds, of Missouri, were strung up by a mob on the Sacramento, for horse stealing, on the 8th.

Moffat & Co., whose Gold coin was so common all over California, have received the contract, of the Government Assay office in San Francisco, and are now kept busily employed.

Nevada City has almost been destroyed by fire, supposed to be the work of incendiaries, who fired the town in different quarters at the same moment. A number of fine buildings were consumed, and the loss is estimated at not less than one million dollars.

Enormous Emigration.

The vanguard of the great army of immigrants, which letters from abroad and the English newspapers tell us is to invade the port of New York the coming season, is beginning to come in. Since Saturday night the following vessels, chiefly packet ships, have been reported in our marine columns:

Siddons,	Liverpool,	469
Vanguard,	"	519
Fidelia,	"	416
Arctic,	"	559
Fides,	"	288
Constantine,	"	556

Edward O'Brien,	"	298
Mississippi,	Cork,	265
Caroline and Mary Clark,	—Havre,	275
Total for the two days past,		4,067

The number of steerage passengers arrived here on Monday alone was, from Liverpool 2,548; Londonderry 159; Hamburgh 126; Antwerp 146; in all 2,981. The number arrived previously this month is, 7,768, making a grand total for the month thus far, of 10,749—of which the ships Underwriter brought 690, Manhattan 780, Devonshire 429, States Right 340, and others besides those above mentioned, ranging from 375 to 150.—[N. Y. Express.

We clip the following from the Organ and Revielle of the 27th ult:

The steamers Uncle Sam and Iroquois landed from each, three hundred emigrant passengers at the Quarantine station on Wednesday night. On the Uncle Sam all were healthy, but the Iroquois had been less fortunate. On the trip up, nineteen cases of cholera occurred, twelve of which resulted in death. There were also thirty-six cases of ship fever.

The North China Herald announces the discovery by some missionaries, of a race of Jews in the interior of the country, three hundred and fifty miles from Pekin.

It is the duty of every friend of humanity to arm himself for life's contest and keep his armor ready for constant use. We speak not of wars with flesh and blood; it is a more noble war to which we allude. It is a contest for the supremacy of truth over error, or, the triumph of virtuous and honest principles over those which are vicious and dishonorable.

MARRIED,

At St. Louis, Mo., on Saturday April 26th, by Elder Thomas Wrigley, Mr. ALEXANDER GILBERT to Miss ANN McPHERSON, daughter of Capt. McPherson, both from England, and now on their way to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.

The Printers were kindly remembered in this case, although at a distance, and they say:

Peace, and Union, will prevail,
In the State, they've lately entered:
Love, and virtue, ne'er will fail
To adorn those hearts united.

In this town by the Editor, on Sunday 4th inst. Mr. ELIOT A. NEWELL to Miss MARIA L. ROBERTS, both of this county.

Cheerful and merry, they'll pass down the stream
Of time, without sorrow invading;
With plenty of friends,—no foes to condemn,
And virtue enshrine them, unfading

At Caterville, on the 15th inst., by Elder T. D. Brown, ANDREW N. HENDERSON, and ISABELLA LIVINGSTON, both natives of Scotland.

DIED,

At North Pigeon on the 16th day of April, 1851, of dropsy, NATHANIEL B. son of Benjamin and Electa Gardner, aged 20 years, 11 months and 7 days.

When forced to part with those we love,
Though sure to meet to-morrow,
We'n kind of anguish prove,
And feel a pang of sorrow.

At North Pigeon, on the 25th ult., CHARITY BUTLER, in her 69th year.

In Savannah, April 12th, of inflamation of the stomach, MARVIN, son of Joseph and Clarissa Hart, aged 9 years.

Though our lovely child is taken,
From our bosom to the urn;
Soon the sleeping dust will waken,
And his spirit will return.

Yes, again we will behold him
Fairer than the morning ray—
In durarms we will enfold him,
Where all tears are wiped away.

Fearful Ravages of an Earthquake.

A paragraph recently appeared in our columns announcing shocks of earthquakes throughout the Western World, Hindostan, &c. Fuller accounts disclose a frightful degree of havoc resulting from the phenomena:

Letters from Rhodes, of the 8th ult., furnish details of the great earthquake which took place on the 23th of Feb. Rhodes has suffered considerably; the fortifications were completely destroyed, and several have completely disappeared. At Marmorice 500 houses were laid prostrate. At Macrie all the stone buildings have been knocked down. Two hills have met and swallowed up the village of Melaskjik; and at Egendjik a mountain was removed into port. The casualities are estimated at 1000 souls. It is stated that earthquakes took place at Satila and Tarsus. A letter from Rhodes, in the Venice Gazette, states the terrible effects of an earthquake were not limited to that Island alone, but were felt on the Asiatic continent opposite. "The towns of Makri, Levissos, Doveri, Sene, Carasoha, and fifteen villages along that coast, (says the correspondent,) are now heaps of ruins; not a house has been left standing; from 500 to 600 persons have fallen victims to the scourge; the summit of the mountain of Igenkik has given way. Olive plantations to an immense extent have been utterly destroyed. Springs of potable water have been dried up, and boiling sulphurous springs are appeared in several places. The soil around Makri has cracked in every direction, and the crevices exhale fumes of bituminous vapor. The European colonists of Makri have taken refuge on board the Austrian ship Isidoro. The inhabitants of the coast and islands are in a state of despondency, as the shocks continue daily, and the few houses left standing are in a tottering condition." From India we learn that the earthquake have been felt extensively over Punjaub, or the northwest provinces, on the 17th and 31st of Jan., and on the 4th, 6th and 14th of Feb. No injury of any note has been occasioned by them. Letters which have been received from Martinique and Guadaloupe, of the 31st ult., report that rather a sharp shock of an earthquake had been felt on the 22d of Feb., at St. Pierre, and Port de France, Martinique, but it did no damage worth speaking of. Letters from Mexico, of the 15th ult., state, that at Guerrero on the 28th of Jan., there was an earthquake. At the same moment there appeared in the heavens a most luminous meteor, which passed from east to west, accompanied by terrific thunder.

Arrival of the Asia.

PHILADELPHIA, April 23d.

The Asia left Liverpool on the 12th, at four o'clock, P. M., and reached her dock at eleven this morning, making the trip in ten days and nineteen hours. The market for provisions was dull, and sales of small lots met a decline. Tobacco was more active; wool dull and with a light stock; corn market dull. In Manchester purchases are made very sparingly, and those only for the supply of the immediate wants of the trade, but as the market is very bare of yarns, there is no great pressure in spinners of manufactures.

Additional News Per Asia.

PHILADELPHIA, April 23.

Switzerland.

Advices from Geneva state that the Governor of the Canton has refused to expel from its territory the one hundred and seventy-five French refugees, as was ordered by the French Government; in what way this refusal will be received by the government of Louis Napoleon, remains yet a mystery.

Spain.

The Spanish Cortes has been dissolved by the Queen.

On the 7th April, the Madrid Gazette published a decree, giving the Portfolio of the Home Department to Mr. Beltran De-Lis, in addition to his own of Foreign Affairs—Martella, Minister of Home Affairs, has been transferred to the Department of Public Works.

Prussia.

Advices have been received from Berlin to the 9th inst. Letters to the London Times contain no news respecting the progress of the German question.

Austria.

We have advices from Vienna to the 7th instant. The Austrian Government has imposed an income tax in the Lombardy Venetian Provinces.

Turkey.

The last accounts state that a corps of 20,000 insurgents from the Ukraine are advancing upon Narvi, for the purpose of effecting a junction with the rebels at Pieder. Omar Pacha is concentrating his forces at Berlaka.

DETROIT, April 23d.

A most depraved and organized gang of men numbering from thirty to forty have been arrested in Jackson County. Their sole occupation was destroying the property of the Central railroad, by placing obstructions on the track, counterfeiting, horse-stealing, burglary and robbery. Among the persons arrested are three justices of the peace, five physicians, one judge and four constables. The depot at this place lately burned, is said to have been fired by one of this gang.

Another World's Fair.

The Paris correspondent of the Journal of Commerce mentions that the King Belgium issued a decree for a universal exhibition at Brussels, of objects of art and works living artists, on the 15th of next August. It is meant to attract a part of the concourse at London to the Belgian Capital. The French journals also urge that a Grand Exhibition should be undertaken, for July, in Paris. The London World's Fair is limited to four months.

The Cuban Invasion Again.

There is no longer reason to doubt that a second expedition is on foot for the invasion of Cuba. We do not doubt that the President will take the most efficient steps to suppress this second attempt to distrub the tranquility of a neighboring power, with which we are at peace. The past conduct of the Administration affords the strongest guarranty that the utmost good faith towards Spain will be observed by our government; and that all needful precautions will be taken to disperse the misguided persons, who seem obstinately intent upon revolutionizing Cuba at the eminent risk of running their own neck into a halter. After the disastrous result of the last expedition and the desperate chances of success in the present one, it would seem that none but fools or lunatics could be so deluded as to venture their lives upon so hazardous an enterprise. But they go into the business with their eyes open, and will have no cause of complaint at any disastrous result which may ensue.

If they render themselves amenable to the laws of this country by so wilful and flagrant an act, we trust and we do not doubt that they will be visited with the severest penalty which attaches to the offence; and if, perchance, they should escape the vigilance of our own government, and should afterwards fall into the hands of the Captain General of Cuba, they must content themselves with such tender mercies as he may see fit to extend to them. Our government, we are satisfied, will not, and ought not, to interfere in their behalf. Men who wilfully and deliberately place themselves in the attitude of robbers and pirates, have no right to expect the interposition of the government to shield them from the fate which they so wantonly provoke. It is time that we should evince to the world, by some decisive act, that our neutrality obligations will be rigidly and faithfully observed, be the consequences what they may to the deluded men who seek to violate them. President Fillmore is not the man to shrink from the responsibility of his position in such an emergency.

Italy.

Important from the Papal States.

The Pope and Cardinals have fallen into the depth of despair (says the Rome correspondent of the London Times, under date of the 14th ult.) since the French steamer of yesterday distributed the fatal news of the restoration of the Russell Cabinet. I am told that the Post fell like a thunderbolt on the Vatican, and that, for a long time, the Holy Father and the Camarilla refused to credit the bad news. It was only when their own despatches arrived that they admitted the melancholy truth, and now, unable to make head against it, they look to the Protectionists, to the Irish members, to free trade, to anything and everything, as a means of again throwing the country into confusion, and expelling the whig cabinet. Cardinal Wiseman and his advisers, who had lately regained the position that had lost on the majority in favor of bringing in the bill, being made known here, have again fallen into disrepute, and the Vatican is more irritated than ever at their indiscretion; even the Supreme Pontiff feels that the Archbishop of Westminster had miscalculated the force of his adversaries, and his Grace, who was looked upon as inspired, because all his letters asserted that the Ministry was struck to the ground, is now regarded as a feeble man, misled by his own vanity, and who knew not how to estimate the weight or extent of public opinion at home.

NEW YORK, April 24th.

The steamer Ohio, Capt. Schenick, from Chagres via New Orleans and Havana arrived here at 7 o'clock this morning with 200 passengers and $600,000 in gold dust, and $20,000 in specie on freight. The Ohio crossed the bar at the Balize at 4½ o'clock on the 16th, and arrived at Havana at 4 o'clock on the 18th, and sailed again the next day. Lieut. Hunter, U. S. Army, came passenger from Havana on the Ohio.

The steamer Georgia, for Chagres, left Havana the same day as the Ohio.

Great excitement and much consternation prevailed in Havana, caused by the current rumor of another invasion of the Island of Cuba; so confidently was such an event anticipated that during the week before the Ohio sailed, the troops were ordered to sleep on their Arms to be ready at a moment's warning.

BARE-FACED.—The new fashioned bonnets.

It is said that the roof of the Cyrstal Palaces proves to be leaky in several places and that it is doubtful whether the building can be made perfectly water-tight. Should this fear prove true, the Great Exhibition will come out badly.

POETRY.

Old Adam.

BY WILLIAM CLAYTON.

Old Adam was a gentleman, a farmer too by trade,
He was not ashamed to plough, to handle pick or spade;
But picks and spades there were none then, he had them all to form,
And yet he was a gentleman, the first that e'er was born.
Old Adam was a gentleman, the first of Olden time.

Now was he not a tailor too, he sewed fig leaves together,
And made himself a garment neat, to screen him from the weather,
He did not tell the kind of thread he used on that occasion,
Nor yet the needles, whether made by him or another nation.
Old Adam was a gentleman, &c.

And was he not a blacksmith too, he must have used a knife,
Because he offer'd sacrifice, and that by taking life.
A mason too, he surely was; an altar he did make;
And yet he was a gentleman, as good as ever spake,
Old Adam was a gentleman, &c.

Now Adam, he was wealthy too, the whole earth was his farm;
He own'd the gold, the pearls, and stock, which lived and did no harm;
But yet he had no serving men, to kick and cuff and scold;
Nor did he buy or hire men to go and dig for gold.
Yet Adam was a gentleman, &c.

He never fought on slavery with any other nation,
Nor did he squander time away by law and litigation;
He had no slave to black his boots, nor nigger to attend him;
With his hands he did his chores, yet none would dare offend him.
Old Adam was a gentleman, &c.

Oh, rich men, loafers puffed with pride, who scorn your hands to stain,
A pattern by old Adam take, to labor don't disdain;
Go till the earth, and bear a share of honest labor's toil,
'Tis a gentlemanly trade, my friends, to till and tend the soil.
Old Adam was a gentleman, &c.

And when this earth is once restored to full primeval bliss,
The sons of Adam then will tend no other earth but this;
Rich blessings will their labors crown, and joys in endless store,
And Adam be the head of all, to govern evermore.
His subjects will be gentlemen, of pure Millennial times.

MISCELLANY.

Importance of Agriculture.

Agriculture has been aptly styled the "nursing mother of arts." It is the basis, the soul of our national prosperity. Commerce and manufactures conduce, in a great measure, to wealth; but the cultivation of the soil ever has been, and ever will continue to be, the fountain head of the streams of a country's resources.

There can be no strength in the State, and no mortal health among the people, when the tillage of the land is neglected. We can date the decay of power and virtue of many nations from the decline of their agricultural industry. In Rome, for instance, when the wise policy of fostering agriculture was persued, a healthful influence pervaded the whole State. Then the laws were impartially administered, and justice done to all. Then labor was accounted honorable, and statesmen, and generals, and philosophers cultivated their farms with their own hands. It was then that from among the tillers of the soil arose a Regulus, a Cincinnatus, and an invincible soldiery. It was then that the "seven hilled city" breathed defiance to her enemies, and caused nation after nation to yield to the resistless power of her Legions, until the roman eagle waved the known world. But when the largesses of corn were bestowed upon an idle populace, when agriculture was neglected, and war laid waste the fertile fields of Italy, the Roman virtue and Roman vigor fled. Soon intrigue, vice and venality took firm hold in the State, until finally the "pale mother of empires" was abandoned to her enemies, and the palaces of the Cæsars echoed the tread of the victorious barbarian. History abounds in examples illustrative of the important fact, that the enduring greatness of a nation is mainly founded upon its agriculture, and rulers would do well to increase the prosperity of those who swing the scythe and hold the plough.

That country which does not posess within itself the means of subsistence for its own inhabitants, is, if we may trust the voice of experence, destined to sink to early ruin. National power based upon commerce alone, unsupported by a flourishing industry, which ministers to human wants and gratifications, must fall to the ground. Merely commercial States dependant upon contingences for their very life blood, and imbued with that spirit of speculation which tends to enervate the body and corrupt the mind, contain within their own bosoms the seeds of dissolution. Phœnicia, Carthage, Genoa, Venice and Holland, of the sixteenth centuries, all bear witness of this fact. There is much truth in these verses of Goldsmith.:

"Trade's proud empire hastes to swift decay,
As ocean sweeps the labored mole away;
While the self-dependent power can time defy,
As rocks resist the billows and the sky"

To her unsurpassed agriculture, England is most indebted for her support in the midst of those tremendous pressures which have so often threatened to crush her. It is the unparalelled cultivation of the soil that has enabled the British people, placed upon a rock-bound island, to excel the world in every fabric, to maintain an unrivaled navy, and plant their power in every quarter of the globe. Firm are the foundations of the strength of that nation, which, in time of peace, is nourished by the resources of its own industry and in war can rely upon the strong arms and undaunted hearts of its yeomanry, to sustain its rights in the din of strife or in the roar of battle!

Upon agriculture, in addition to the necessaries and common comforts of life, depends the success of every other employment. It is agriculture that builds up our crowded cities, covers our fields with yellow grain, and diffuses life and vigor through the land. It is agriculture that supports our gigantic manufactories, ringing from the basement to the attic with the music of free labor, and causes our ten thousand ships to dance upon every rolling billow, and spread their sails to every propitious gale. Says Lord Erskine, in his political romance called Armata: "You might as well hope to see the human body in motion when palsy had reach the heart, or a tree flourish after its roots were decayed, as expect to see manufactures of arts, or industry of any description, progeessive, when agriculture has declined." Paralyze it, and you weaken the impulse of enterprise, stifen the fingers of machinery, and clip the wings of commerce. Destroy it, and you bury in the common grave, national power and individual prosperity.

A Row among the Stars--Probable Secession of several Planets from the solar System.

There is a great cause for alarm — Clairvoyant intelligence from one of the Asteroids announces that there is strong probability of a dissolution of the solar system. Mars is arming, Jupiter has ordered a new set of thunderbolts, Saturn has challenged Mercury to enter the ring with him, and there is a grand muss generally. The main cause of the rumpus seems to be the addition of a new star to the planetary union, being the ninth added during the last five years! Within less than ten years, thirteen young planets have been annexed to the primaries, and the former are now actually in a majority. Of course, the whole congregation of orbs is on the eve of a crisis, and in the midst of a revolution. The principal difficulty seems to be this, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and the Earth, all have satellites or slaves, whose duty it is to manufacture moonlight for their masters: while Mercury, Venus, Mars and Neptune, the other four primary planets, repudiate this species of involuntary servitude as a burning shame, and do their own lamp-lighting. So long as the slaveholding and non-slaveholding planets were equally matched—four and four—no great harm could come of their disputes on this impotant question, especially as the fundamental law by which they revolve forbids them to interfere with each other's private affairs; but when the new planets or asteroids began to come in, there was the devil to pay. The old satellite owners perceived that they were about to be awfully outnumbered, and wanted to have a law enacted that no orb without satellites should be admitted into the system. Thereupon the four non-satellite-holding planets, and the young 'uns that had just joined, made common cause, and proposed to abolish satellites altogether! Here was the duce to pay again. The sun as the central power of the system, was appealed to, but declined to interfere; and the result is that the offended parties threaten to retire from their orbits as they maintain they have a perfect right to do being independent sovereignties, revolving upon their own individual axes.

What will be the issue it is impossible to say; but a postscript to our latest despatch from Jupiter the largest satellite holder in the steller confederacy, intimates that the planets, large and small, have agreed to be governed in their decision by the denouncement of a similar quarrel, on a small scale, now going on in this hemisphere.

Should disruption be the end of the affair, we intend to take up our abode on Parthenope, one of the youngest of the new steller states, and pleasantly situated, as we learn from Mr. Gasparis, who has been there by telescope, between Mars and Jupiter.—[Noah's Times.

The Silent Lovers.

An eminent clergyman one evening became the subject of conversation, and a wonder was expressed that he had never married. "That wonder," said Miss Porter, "was one expressed to the reverend gentleman himself, in my hearing, and he told a story in answer, which I will tell you, and perhaps, slight as it may seem, it is the history of other hearts as sensitive and delicate as his own.

"Soon after his ordination, he preached every Sabbath for a clergyman in a small village not twenty miles from London. Among his auditors, from Sunday to Sunday, he observed a young lady, who occupied a certain seat, and whose close attention began insensibly to grow to him an object of thought and pleasure. She left the church as soon as service was over, and it so chanced that he went for a year without knowing her name; but his sermon was never written without many a thought how she would approve it, nor preach with satisfaction unless he read approbation in her face.

"Gradually he came to think of her at other times than when writing sermons, and to see her on other days than Sundays; but the weeks stepped on, and he fancied that she grew paler and thinner, he never brought himself to the resolution either to ask her name or to speak to her. By these silent steps, however, love had worked into his heart, and he made up his mind to seek her acquaintance and marry her, if possible, when one day he was sent for to minister at a funeral.

"The face of the corpse was the same that had looked up at him Sunday after Sunday, till he had learned to make it a part of his religion and his life. He was unable to perform the service, and another clergyman officiated; and, after she was buried, her father took him aside, and begged his pardon for giving him pain, he could not resist the impulse to tell him that his daughter had mentioned his name with her last breath, and he was afraid that a concealed affection for him had hurried her to the grave. 'Since that,' said the clergyman in question, 'my heart has been dead within me, and I look forward to the time when I shall speak to her in heaven.

A Strong Man.

A correspondent of the Florence (Ala.) Gazette, is rather strong in his expressions of disapprobation of those who are in favor of a dissolution of the Union. He says:

"A man of that character could not get a meal's victuals or a bed to sleep on at my house. My dogs should not bark at him. If was to catch a buzzard eating the carcass of a disunionist, I would shoot it. They are the last of all creation; fit for nothing but to be winked at by negroes, kicked at by mules, gored by bulls, and butted by rams.

WILLIAM A. ODLE,—Proprietor.

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of Kanesville, and the public generally that he has purchased the new buildings heretofore owned by Messrs. B. R. Pegram & Co., situated about half way between the Kane Post Office, and Mr. Hyde's Printing Office, on Main street, and fitted them up, for a good, comfortable hotel, and boarding house for the accommodation of emigrants, travelers, or boarders in town. Mr. O. intends to have no ardent spirits drank on his premises,—the use of which in many such places has been a source of serious annoyance to the orderly and temperate portion of society—neither will he accommodate any person that is constantly addicted to said habit. Clerks will find the Kanesville Hotel a good "RESTAURANT," as the proprietor intends that every thing in the eatable line will be served up "CLEAN" and plenty of it.

ORSON HYDE.—Editor of this paper.

IT is our design to enter into the above business, and having already made partial arrangements for receiving and forwarding heavy stocks of goods, wares and merchandize hence, to the Valley of the Salt Lake in the Spring, he flatters himself that his position and facilities will enable him to give general satisfaction, and thereby secure a liberal patronage.

He will receive in store all kinds of goods from the East, West, North or South; also shipments o produce by boat or wagon, and sell the same on commission if desired. Groceries received and sold on commission at wholesale only. Liberal cash advances made on all property left in charge. Flour, Bacon, &c., &c.

FIFTH GENERAL EPISTLE

Of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, from Great Salt Lake Valley, State of Deseret, to the Saints scattered throughout the Earth.

GREETING:

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Ever mindful of the Redeemer's kingdom and of your interest therein, we gladly improve the present moment in expressing to you our watchfulness and care concerning you, and concerning those things which may tend to your present happiness and future exaltation. There is nothing that transpires around us, but what has its tendency to good or evil; and while we are in the world, and are surrounded by circumstances and events which have a bearing on our welfare, either for or against, it becomes us, as Saints of the Most High, to inform and become informed; and to treasure up knowledge and wisdom concerning all things that are transpiring on earth; and in the heavens, so far as it concerns us and we are permitted to know: and in hell too, that we may be ready to shun every evil tendency, and embrace all good; and if through our pen the wisdom of God shall be made manifest for your good, comfort, consolation, and salvation, the greatest joy of our hearts will be realized.

The Church, of which you are members, was organized on the 6th of April, 1830; then consisting of six individuals, since which time it has continued to increase, and to be persecuted and driven from town to town, from county to county, and from State to State, and out of States; until its resting place in the wilderness and vallies of the mountains, is about three thousand miles from the place of its organization in the State of New York; and in those persecutions, prophets and apostles have been martyred for the truth's sake, and the elders have been scattered abroad on the four quarters of the earth, and the islands of the sea, preaching as they went; faith on the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, the Lord's Supper, the gathering, the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment; and hundreds of thousands have believed and yielded obedience to the heavenly message, and are patiently waiting the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; who, ere long, will set his feet again on Mount Olivet, and make himself manifest unto Israel, according to the predictions of the ancient prophets; for Israel must be gathered from all nations, and be again established in the land of their inheritance, and behold the wounds in the hands and side of Him whom they have pierced, and acknowledge Him as their Savior, their Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel. The gathering of Israel has already commenced; Judea is receiving its ancient inhabitants, and the Holy City is re-building: which is one prominent sign of the near approach of the Messiah.

During the twenty-one years since the organization of the Church, the Gospel has been preached in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, the East and West Indies, and on many islands and clusters of islands in the Atlantic and Pacific; many thousands of Saints have gathered from various parts of the earth unto Zion; to America, the land which God has pointed out as a place of safety for his people, in these last days; and which will prove a place of refuge for kings, and princes, and nobles, and honorable men of the earth of all nations, whether rich or poor, who are disposed to seek refuge therein, when the overflowing scourges of God's wrath shall destroy the nations, and depopulate the earth on account of the multipled infidelity and abominations of the inhabitants thereof. The unparalleled spread of the Gospel, in so short a space of time, and the rapid gathering of the Saints, is another token of Messiah's near approach.

The increasing convulsions of the nations, the multiplied wars and rumors of wars; the internal dissensions which threaten the dis-union and overthrow of the best governments on the earth; the increasing plagues and sickness in new and diversified forms, baffling the skill of the ablest physicians, and causing the wisdom of the wisest to perish; the increasing divisions among professing Christian parties, and members of the same party, showing, daily, a greater and greater want of that union which must exist to secure the perpetuity of the principles of righteousness among any people, and without which God's kingdom cannot exist on earth or in the heavens; the increase of whirlwinds, hurricanes, tornadoes, and earthquakes; the increase of the loss life by shipwreck and tempest, by steamboat explosions and burnings; the destruction of life and property by murder and incendiarism, robbery, burglary, and theft; the fearful sights, the strange signs, and knockings, and noises, frequently exhibited in the heavens and on the earth; the increase of seers, and wizards, and diviners, and familiar spirits, and soothsayers, and astrologers, who are charming the nations with their magic arts, lulling the foolish to sleep with their magnetic influence, deceiving priests and people by their necromancy, calling rain, snow, and fire from heaven, and scattering abroad the hoar frost like a winter's night, in their halls of science, and the people supporting them by their faith, influence, and money, leaving the poor, the sick, the widow and the fatherless, to mourn for the comforts of life in the solitary chamber, and the too general corruptions and abominations, and defilements, and poluted practices of all flesh upon the face of the earth; all, all these signs, and multitudes more of a like nature, now existing, are the fulfillment of the prophecies, not only of the ancient prophets, but more particularly of the Latter-day Prophet and Apostle, Seer, and Revelator, Joseph Smith, who opened up the way of life and salvation to this generation, by the power of the everlasting Priesthood, which was restored to earth through him, and who prophesied and bore witness that all these, and many more like things should come to pass in this generation, as signs of the second coming of the Son of Man, which is near at hand; and verily his testimony is true, and his testament is in force, for he has sealed it with his blood; therefore, hear it all ye ends of the earth; believe on Jesus, be baptized in his name for the remission of your sins, and do all things he shall command, and you shall be saved in the presence of God and the Lamb; and there is no other way by which you can be saved.

Of the day and the hour of the coming of Christ no man knoweth. It is not yet, neither is it far off; there are prophecis yet to be fulfilled before that event takes place; therefore, let no man deceive the Saints with vain philosophy and false prophecy; for false prophets will arise, and deceive the wicked, and, if possible, the good; but while the wicked fear and tremble at surrounding judgments, the Saints will watch and pray; and, waiting the final event in patience, will look calmly on the passing scenery of a corrupted world, and view transpiring events as confirmation of their faith in the holy gospel which they profess, and rejoice more and more, as multiplied signs shall confirm the approach of the Millennial day.

The Saints at home are making preparations to receive the Saints from abroad, and we feel grateful to our heavenly Father that we can bear witness in truth, that the choice blessings of the God of Abraham have rested upon his people, in the vallies of the mountains, since we last wrote you. The winter has been mild, compared with most winters, and much business has been transacted which could not have been done, had the weather been severe. Several grain and lumber mills have been erected, in the various settlements, the past winter; many shingles have been made, and all that is wanting to bring them into immediate use, is nails; and let the Saints, coming hither, remember this in particular. Chairs and various articles of furniture are multiplying in our midst. Two or three threshing machines have been in successful operation in our Valley, the past fall and winter, which have saved the labor of many hundred days, which have been appropriated to other objects of improvment; yet more machines will be wanted for threshing, in this Valley, the present season, and also in the various settlements of other vallies, and there is no fear of bringing too many, or too many fanning mill irons, and the most approved drafts for manufacturing the same.

It is a subject never to be forgotten by the Saints coming hither, that the most highly improved labor saving machinery of all kinds ever needed by almost any community, can be employed to greater advantage in Deseret, than any other place on earth. Suppose a brother coming home brings some piece machinery with which he can sow, reap, thresh, fan, or perform the labor of 10 men at this or any other kind of business necessary to be done, nine elders could be immediately released from their employment, and go forth to preach the Gospel, and the improvments of Deseret, and the necessary preparations for a multiplying population suffer no material injury; while, under existing circumstances, there is enough for all to do who are here, to prepare for the coming of others; consequently it is not wisdom to send many elders on foreign missions at present.

Our Council House was so far completed during the fall, that the several apartments have been occupied through the winter, to the great joy of this people. The warm spring Bath House was completed, and dedicated by prayer and festival, on the 27th of November, since which time the House has been open to the public, for health and pleasure. The tithing store house was enclosed last fall, and so far completed that one apartment has been used for a store, another for storage of grain, others for mechanic's shops, while the cellars have been filled with vegetables, and the whole in progress of finishing. Building has hitherto been retarded, at times, for lack of lumber; but the prospect is much more flattering for the future. The inclosing for the university lands by a substantial stone wall is commenced and progressing, with a prospect of being completed this season. Great loss has been sustained hitherto, by straying of cattle; but the tithing pasture, a large tract of land on the northern border of the City, is so far enclosed by fence and ditch, that it will soon be completed, and be of great utility this season. The Church farm is partly fenced. All who can bring wire No. 9, will find it of great advantage in fencing in the Valley.

The State has appropriated two thousand dollars towards opening a woollen manufactory in this Valley the present season; and any amount of raw cotton, or cotton yarn, which may be brought hither, will prove highly useful to combine in certain fabrics, with the wool which grows in the Valley. Our pottery is nearly completed, and we are expecting to use China ware of our own manufacture in a few weeks. Cutlery establishments have commenced in the City, on a small scale, but more laborers are needed.

The snow fell on the mountains surrounding this Valley on the 10th of October, and has continued to the present time, but in the Valley there was no snow till the 1st of November, about seven inches deep; and the first severe frost was on the 5th; and again on the 1st of December about four inches of snow fell, and at other times the snow has fallen, but seldom over four or five inches in the Valley during one storm. The last two nights in February were the coldest during the winter. Most of the month of March was very pleasant, and was improved by the farmers in putting in wheat. There was not so much wheat sown in the Valley last fall as there was the fall previous, but considerable has been sown this Spring. The spring sowing is quite as sure a crop as the winter, and equal in quantity and quality. The last week in March and first in April have been visited with high winds, alternate from south and north-west; some slight showers, and some snow squalls of three or four inches, during nights which would pass off during the next day; and wheat sowing continues the principle business of the day, and may be continued from four to six weeks.

Elder Amasa Lyman arrived by the northern route, from California, on the 30th of September; and Elder C. C. Rich, by the same route, arrived on the 12th of November, each accompanied by a company of 30 to 50 of the brethren on their return from the Gold Mines, of the products of which they brought very little with them; some were compelled to borrow to get home; and many who remained at the Mines would gladly have returned home if they could procured means.

December 7th, Elder George A. Smith, left this City with about 130 men, a few families, and a good supply of teams, seeds and tools, for the purpose of establishing a settlement at Iron County, (Little Salt Lake,) about 250 miles, nearly South. We learn by an express that the colony have located in a good place, excellent soil and water, plenty of wood, iron ore, and alum, with some prospect of stone coal; a field of 1600 acres, and 400 of it sown, and that they design to sow the whole this season. And their houses, which are to constitute a Fort, and their meeting house is progressing rapidly. The name of the place is Cedar City.

November 27th, the Quorum of Seventies, in conference assembled, agreed to erect an extensive Rotunda in Great Salt Lake City, to be called the "Seventies' Hall of Science," and Joseph Young, their President, was appointed trustee and superintendent of the work. The foundation of the Hall is commenced on East Temple and Second South streets. Shares are twenty-five dollars, and the Seventies abroad will do well to forward their means for the Hall, to the Trustee, inasmuch as they desire to own shares, and partake of the blessings of the Hall on their return. All the elders of the different quorums are permitted to take shares. The design is highly commendable to the brethren, and such a building is much needed in this place.

At a special session of the Great Salt Lake County Court on the 3d of January, a few transcient men were convicted of stealing, and sentenced to hard labor for various terms, who, after serving a portion of their time, were pardoned by the executive, and have gone on their way to California, the place of their original destination. This was the first jury trial there had been in the State of Deseret since its organization, and the first occasion for the empannelling of a grand jury. It is supposed that about three hundred emigrants who quartered in the Valley the past winter, have left for the gold mines this Spring. Many emigrants on arriving at this place, heard the gospel, believed, and were baptized, and thus far proved their sincerity by their works; while some professed to believe and were baptized, but their works have made manifest their hypocrisy, and their sins remain on their own heads. Had it not been for such kind of characters, no jury would have been needed in Deseret to this day.

In the former part of January, the General Assembly of Deseret granted an act of incorporation to Great Salt Lake City, and on the 11th of the same month the Great Salt Lake City Council was organized; Jedediah M. Grant, Mayor, with four Aldermen, and nine Counsellors; and municipal law immediately began to extend its influence over the City. About the same time, charters were granted by the General Assembly, on petition to Ogden City, in Weber County, to Provo City, in Utah County; to Manti City, in Sanpete County; and to Cedar City, in Iron County. All the counties in the State were greatly strengthened by the last emigration, and since that time several new settlements have been formed, and the agricultural interest of the State has been greatly extended.

A railroad has been chartered, to extend from Temple block in this City, to the stone quarry and mountain on the East, for the conveyance of building materials; the construction to commence immediately.

A small company of brethren arrived from California, by the south route, on the 27th of January, bringing the rumored intelligence that Utah Territory had been organized, and Brigham Young appointed Governor; which intelligence has recently been reiterated through the medium of the eastern mail, in a manner which leaves no room to doubt; but as yet, the official notice, reports, or papers have not all been received. We anticipate no convulsive revolutionary feeling or movement, by the citizens of Deseret in the anticipated change of governmental affairs; but an easy and quiet transition from State to Territory, like weary travelers descending a gentle hill near by their way-side home.

As a people, we know how to appreciate, most sensibly the hand of friendship which has been extended towards our infant State by the General Government. Coming to, this place as did the citizens of Deseret, without the means of subsistence, except the labor of their hands, in a wilderness country, surrounded by savages, whose inroads have given occasion for many tedious and expensive expeditions; the relief afforded by our mother land, through the medium of the approaching territorial organization, will be duly estimated; and from henceforth, we would fondly hope the most friendly feelings may be warmly cherished between the various States and Territories of this great nation, whose constitutional charter is not to be excelled.

The first Presidency of the Quorum of Seventies, have been in frequent conference, the past winter, with the Presidents of their several Quorums, enquiring into the situation of their officers, severing from their office all such as have been known to dishonor their high and holy calling, and filling these vacancies with worthy men; also in filling the places of those who have been known to die since the quorums were organized in Nauvoo. The High Priest's, and other quorums of the Church, have held their weekly meetings in the Council House during the winter, so that the House has scarce been cold since it was so far completed as to be occupied.

In January, we visited the brethren in Davis and Weber counties, and organized a stake of Zion at Ogden City, by appointing a Presidency, High Council and Bishops: Loren Farr is President of the stake. Officers were also appointed in various places in Davis County, as there was occasion.

Elders Amasa Lyman and Charles C. Rich, left this place early in March, with others, the Camp amounting to about one hundred and fifty wagons, (some of which were to stop and locate themselves in Iron County,) for the purpose of establishing a settlement in the southern part of California, at no great distance from San Diego, and near Williams' Ranche and Cahone Pass, between which and Iron County, we design to establish settlements as speedily as possible, which Elder Lyman will commence on his route, if practicable, so as to have a continued line of stations and places of refreshment between this point and the Pacific, which route is passable during the winter months.

March 19th, we visited the Saints in Utah, and organized a stake of Zion at Provo City, by appointing Isaac Higbee President, with his Counsellors, High Council and Bishops. On the 24th, we visited Elders Lyman and Rich's Camp, at Payson, and saw them organized read for their departure. Elder Pace presides over the Branch at Payson, which is situated on Peteetneet Creek. There are settlements also, at Pleasant Grove and Springville. We left Elder P. P. Pratt, accompanied by Bishop John Murdock, and Elders William J. Perkins, John S. Woobury, Richard R. Hopkins, Philo B. Wood, Morris Minor, and Francis A. Hammond, with Elder Lyman's company, on his mission to the Pacific.

Our City is now being fenced into blocks, instead of wards as formerly, and many shade trees are being set on the borders of the side-walks. School houses have been built in most of the wards, both in the City and county, and schools have been sustained therein the past winter, and we joyfully anticipate that the time has arrived, when our children may be partakers of the blessings of constantly continued schools, in their several wards. The Parent School is in successful operation in the Council House, under the tuition of Chancellor O. Spencer and Regent W. W. Phelps. The design of this School is to prepare its pupils to become teachers, and for all who may desire to advance in the higher branches of education. It is designed for the Parent School to be open continually.

Hitherto, California emigrants have been accustomed to leave their sick on our hands, at a heavy expense, and depart without notice; to turn their teams loose in our streets, and near our City, which has caused much destruction of crops and grass, so that if we wanted a load of hay, we have had to go from ten to twenty miles to procure it, and drive our cattle a still greater distance to herd the succeeding winter; but since the organization of a municipality, quarantine has been introduced, and no animals are permitted to roam within the corporation, which extends to some six or eight miles square; and when the surrounding lands are fenced, the accommodations in our immediate vicinity, for those who travel by multitudes, will be small indeed; and, we believe it will be more convenient for the great mass of travelers to the mines, to go by Fort Hall, or some route north of this, saving to themselves the expense and hindrance of quarantine; and other inconveniences arising from a temporary location near a populous city, where cattle are not permitted to run at large.

In view of the anticipated change in our government, and to facilitate business, the General Assembly of Deseret appointed Gov. Young their agent, to receive the $20,000 appropriated by Congress to build a State House in Utah Territory, and cause said House to be erected without delay on Union Square, in this City, a little north-west of Temple Block; and the Assembly adjourned sine die on Saturday last. Dr. J. M. Bernhisel has been appointed by the President to select the Utah Library, for which Congress has appropriated $5000, and, at our latest advices, he was in New York, making the selection. Dr. Bernhisel has issued a circular, soliciting editors and publishers of newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and books, to forward a copy of their productions to Great Salt Lake City, for the benefit of Utah Library. We are happy in announcing the arrival of a few papers and pamphlets already, and if the friends of science generally shall respond in like manner, by forwarding a copy of their works, we will soon have a most valuable reading room attached to the Utah Library, which will cause the blessings of thousands to rest upon the heads of the liberal donors.

The best interest of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund are continually before us, and we would urge the importance of its object upon all the Saints, and desire they would add to its funds by all laudable means, for when once a line of communication is established between this and the Pacific, those funds can be made to bear in a more effective manner than they can under existing circumstances. We are looking forward in hope, that the time is not far distant, when the most speedy conveyance may be had between this and the western coast.

It is wisdom for the English Saints to cease emigration by the usual route through the States, and up the Missouri River; and remain where they are till they shall hear from us again; as it is our design to open up a way across the interior of the continent, by Panama, Tehauntepec, or some of the interior routes, and land them at San Diego, and thus save three thousand miles of inland navigation through a most sickly climate and country. The Presidency in Liverpool will open every desirable correspondence in relation to the various routes, and rates, and conveniences, from Liverpool to San Diego, and make an early report, so that if possible the necessary preparations may be made for next Fall's emigration.

We contemplate erecting a wall around the Temble Block this season, preparatory to laying the foundation of a Temple the year following; and this we will be sure to do, if all the Saints shall prove themselves as ready to pay their tithing, and sacrifice and consecrate of their substance as freely as we will: and if the Saints do not pay their tithing, we can never build or prepare for building; and if there shall be no Temple built, the Saints can have no endowments; and if they do not receive their endowments, they can never attain unto that salvation they are anxiously looking for. So far as the Saints in the United States and Canada desire to see the work of the Lord prosper, let them arise as one man, and come to Deseret, where they can do more for Zion in one year than they can in many years where they are. Come on the Saints' route north of the Platte, as we stated in our last Epistle, leaving the grave yards on the south of the Platte to a future resurrection. If all were agreed in this move, there need not be a Saint left in the States of Canada one year hence. This is wisdom; but if you shall continue to hold on to your farms, and improvements, and effects, for the purpose of improving the price, and making money, you may expect to want help in a future day, when it will be difficult to obtain; and the Saints need not ever to expect a more convenient time to gather out of the States than the present.

The Indians have been troublesome in their operations the past winter, driving off cattle from remote settlements, but with less threatening of life than formerly, and more secret in their depredations.

We have received very few letters from the elders abroad since our last Epistle although there is a monthly mail between this and Independence, Mo., when not interrupted by snow, as it has been mostly the past three months. The twelve Apostles are abroad, except Wilford Woodruff and Ezra T. Benson, who are in the Valley. Their President, Orson Hyde, is located at Kanesville, Iowa, and is expected to visit the Valley this Summer. Parley P. Pratt is on his way to the Society and Sandwich Islands, and Chili; his mission extends to all lands in, and bordering on the Pacific. At last accounts, the work was very prosperous at the Society Isles. We have not heard from the Sandwich mission since the arrival of Elder Hiram Clark and his associates. Orson Pratt is supposed to be in the States on his way to the Valley, where he will be associated with the University of Deseret for a season. John Taylor was at Boulogne, in France, at our latest dates, preaching, translating, and publishing. Lorenzo Snow, having visited the Italian States, was located at Piedmont, in Switzerland. Erastus Snow is at Copenhagen, and the work is prospering in Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Germany, and all that region. We received a letter from Brother Snow, dated Copenhagen, August 17th, 1850. He is translating the Book of Mormon. Franklin D. Richards is Presiding over the Church in the British Isles, and his office is in Liverpool. Amasa Lyman and Charles C. Rich are en route to the Cahone Pass. George A. Smith is Presiding at Iron County. The mission of the Twelve Apostles now abroad, is to all nations, kindred, tongues and people, upon the face of the whole earth; and whenever and wherever the Lord shall open a door for their admission, they will scatter the seed, and, if needs be, will leave wise men to gather the harvest; being guided, directed, and counselled in all their movements by the principle of revelation, and the Holy Ghost dwelling within them; and may the God of Abraham and Joseph help them on their missions, for verily they will not have time to preach to all nations before all flesh shall be seized with fear and trembling in view of those things which the Almighty is about to bring to pass, for the wickedness of man is great before Him, and the earth He will purify by fire.

There has been more sickness in the Valley this Spring, than usual, and several deaths; though the people in the other Vallies have been well generally. We know of no reason why this Valley is not as healthy in its location and character as any other, but as this is the place for the first arrival of the Saints, a greater proportion of the infirm stop here, where they can more readily procure the comforts of life, while the hardier portion go forward to newer settlements; and a great portion of the sickness in our midst arises from the seeds of disease and death sown in the system, while tarrying and passing through the agueish regions of the western states. Sickness here is generally of short duration, and ends speedily in health or death. The families of the Elders who are on foreign missions are in usual health at this time.

The Saints in their gathering should never forget to gather and bring all choice seeds, for here is the place for them to grow and be useful; a large quantity of osage orange, and other seeds suitable for hedges, through which wire may be passed to make fence, are much needed at this time. Bring all the lath and shingle nails you can, also glass, wire No. 9, raw cotton, cotton yarn, machinery, and domestics.

Amid all the revolutions that are taking place among the nations, the elders will ever pursue an undeviating course in being subject to the Government wherever they may be, and sustain the same by all their precepts to the Saints, having nothing to do with political questions which engender strife, remembering that the weapons of their warfare are not carnal but spiritual, and that the gospel which they preach is not of man but from heaven; and if they persecute you beyond measure in one city, country, or kingdom, leave the testimony which Jesus has given for a witness unto your Father in Heaven, that you are free from their blood, and flee to other cities, countries, or kingdoms where they will receive you and believe your testimony.

During the early part of the last session of the General Assembly of Deseret, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was incorporated into a body politic, in accordance with the general principles of incorporation, given by christian governments to religious societies, with power to choose a trustee in trust and assistant trustees to hold the property, and manage the financial affairs of the Church for its benefit and convenience; and during the present general conference President Brigham Young was unanimously and legally elected trustee in trust of the Church, and Edward Hunter assistant trustee, and Presiding Bishop.

Should the way open for any of the scattering Saints (except such as we have before counselled to tarry where they are,) to ship direct to San Diego, in California, they will do so, and from thence they can work their passage to the settlement about to be formed by Brs. Lyman and Rich in that vicinity, and from thence to this place.

May grace, mercy, peace, and prosperity be multiplied unto all the Saints, in the name of Jesus: Amen.

MARSHAL'S OFFICE, IOWA,
May 8th, 1851.

MR. ORSON HYDE:

DEAR SIR:—I this day received two numbers of the Frontier Guardian, in which I find an article headed, (Information Wanted,) and which appears to be Editorial, in which you say; Dr. Luke Johnson, assistant Marshal to take the Census of Pottawatamie County, made his returns in due time to Hon. Stephen B. Shelledy, but has received no official acknowledgement of the same, from the chief Marshal; neither has he received any portion of his pay for his services, though he has written to the Marshal upon the subject to our knowledge long enough to have received a reply. He is in need of his pay after having rendered the services, and if there is any defect in the performance of the duty assigned him, as a reason for this silence and neglect to forward him his pay, he considers it his due to have been apprised of it before this time. Have the mails been robbed, or has the Marshal neglected to write him and forward him the pay as requested? Information on this subject is what the Deputy Marshal wants, and having failed to get any through private correspondence, he seeks a more public way of obtaining the desired information.

Now sir, as you have taken it on yourself as the Editor of a Public Journal, (through sheer ignorance I hope and not through malice,) to cast a public censure on me, both as an officer and a gentleman. I hope you will not refuse to give the following brief explanation as wide a circulation as your gratuitous charge has had.

On the 26th of December I received the Census returns from Luke Johnson, late in the evening. On the 27th I compared the two sets and found them to agree, and on the same day I mailed one set to Washington, and the other set to Iowa City. I also on the same day forwarded to the Superintendant of Census at Washington, a cetificate certifying that the work was done to my satisfaction, and that the assistant was entitled to receive for his services, four hundred and twenty dollars and ninty-four cents. On the same day I mailed to Mr. Johnson a note, of which the following is a copy:

DEAR SIR:—Your returns have been received, and compared, and found to be satisfactory, and a certificate to that effect forwarded to the department at Washington with the amount of your compensation, which is, four hundred and twenty dollars and ninty-four cents.

You say in your article in the Guardian, that Mr. Johnson has written to the Marshal long enough ago to have received a reply. This is saying in a very public manner what you did not know to be true, and what in fact is not true. When the letter of which you speak came to the possession of my family, I was in the north part of the State, on official business, and did not receive the letter till my return Home, which was about five weeks. I supposed by that time that Mr. Johnson would have received his pay, from Washington, and therefore did not reply to his immediately; I wrote to Mr. Johnson in two or three days that I had received notice of the receipt of his work at Washington, and that in due time he would receive a draft from Washington, for one half the amount, and the balance at some future time, and I referred him to the 21st Section of the Act of the 23d May last, a copy of which was furnished him with his Instructions. This letter was mailed at Tools Point, Iowa.

If you willl examine the 21st Section of the Act above referred to, you will find that by the publication of the article of censure in your paper, you and Mr. Johnson have both betrayed an ignorance that ought to make you very cautious for the future how you publicly censure any person, and particularly one who has manifested nothing but feelings of confideuce and respect for you. You were consulted by me with reference to the appointment of a Deputy for your County, and the person appointed, that you recommended, and I think it both ungrateful and ungentlemanly to publish such censure unless you knew that I was censurable. I persume that Mr. Johnson will be satisfied that he has neither been treated with silence or neglect when he sees that his work was examined and certified to the Department the day after it was received by me.

I have a full record of all my proceedings in this matter and cannot be mistaken in dates, or details, which are open to the inspection of all persons. I think that both yourself and Mr. Johnson will find that it would have been better to have sought a little longer by private correspondence for the desired information, instead of this more public manner. I hope you will both be satisfied that there has been no neglect on my part toward Mr. Johnson, and that if he has not received his pay the blame if any rests not with me, and I hope for the future that you will be well satisfied of my dereliction or neglect or dishonesty, before you send out my name in the columns of your paper, coupled with such insinuations, and especially that you will post yourself up well in the law and my duties under it, before you read me lectures for the non-performance of those duties under the law.

By the 21st Section of the Act above referred to you will see that Mr. Johnson must look to the Secretary of the Interior for his pay and not to me, and if you are Mr. Johnson's Guardian, you now have a chance to strike at higher game. I have no doubt but that the Department at Washington are as expeditious as the nature of the service will permit, and that in due time the Assistants will all receive their pay.

I think that as a matter of justice you will not refuse to publish the foregoing, so that the injustice which your publication has done me, (unintentional I hope,) may in some measure be removed, having done this I will therewith be content; otherwise I shall resort to some other source in order to make the defence as public as the charge. If you publish this, send me a copy of your paper to Tools Point, Jasper County, Iowa.

Respectfully Your,
Obedient Servant,
STEPHEN B. SHELLEDY,
U. S. Marshall, for Dt. of Iowa.

We publish the foregoing letter according to request, and feel not wholly unlike him who sought to be spoken to by the King. He tried in divers ways to arrest the attention of his Majesty, but in vain; until at length, as a desperate effort, he placed himself directly in the path of the King and thereby obtained the desired honor: His Majesty spoke to him: and what did he say? In an angry mood, he told him to get out of his road. To be noticed with a rod, is sometimes less annoying than not to be noticed at all.

We confess that we were consulted in relation to the appointment of a Deputy Marshal. Our opinion as to the proper person was honored; and we think that the Chief Marshal will do us the justice to say, from the appearance and style of the returns, that the confidence extended to us was not ill-directed: and while we confess gratitude for the confidence reposed in us, we are considered entitled to none for procuring a faithful and efficient Assistant or Deputy.

It was not through malice that we published the article. It was through a desire to know if the returns had been received; and if so, whether they were accepted and satisfactory. Touching the source from where the pay was to come, we confess our ignorance. We are not Dr. Johnson's Guardian, neither are we indebted to him for our ignorance upon this subject. We knew that he had diligently watched the arrival of the mails for a long time, and received no word about the returns. The letter referred to, as having been received by the Marshal's family in his absence to the North on official business, was penned in our office; and if our memory serve, that letter stated that no word or intelligence had been received from the Census returns from this County since they were sent off by the Mail. This letter was not noticed by the Marshal until the article appeared in the Guardian. We cannot hold Mr. Shelledy responsible for the failure of the Mail in the transmission of intelligence. He says he notified Dr. Johnson upon the receipt of the returns. We believe him! Dr. Johnson received no such notice; and Mr. Shelledy ought not to hold us responsible if the Mail fails to do its duty.

What would any man think, who felt a little pride in executing his trust diligently and faithfully, and who could neither get the approval or disapproval of his Superior, of the manner in which his task was performed? He would feel a painful anxiety about it. The Deputy made his returns from here in the early part of December last, and the very first intimation officially received from the Marshal is contained in the foregoing letter, after a lapse of between five and six months; and that only called out by an article in the public paper, which was responded to direct! and without delay or miscarriage.

We heard a few statements from Dr. Johnson respecting the condition of his affairs; but never examined the law: It was only a hasty commonsense conclusion that we drew,—that is, that he was entitled to some information about the returns before that late period. As to the source of the compensation, we confess our ignorance; and while we regret our want of information upon any useful subject, we can but congratulate ourself, to some extent, upon the virtue of our ignorance. It has secured to the Deputy Marshal a knowledge of the facts that his returns have been received and were satisfactory, and that his compensation is, four hundred and twenty dollars and ninty-four cents. Information which his wisdom and patience failed to obtain. We strike at no higher game than that on the track of which we have run for a short distance; and we were a little inclined to follow it until it "TALKED TURKEY." We have no fault to find now. Let the mails be the scapegoat.

I hereby certify that this letter from Hon. Stephen B. Shelledy contained in this paper, is the first line or word I have received from him since I mailed the Census returns of this County, on or about the 16th of December last. It being just five months from the date of their being mailed at this place.

LUKE JOHNSON,
Assistant Marshal.

FRIDAY, MAY 30, 1851.

See the General Epistle on first Page.

This document, emanating from the heads of the Church, or first Presidency, in the City and Valley of the Great Salt Lake, is worthy to be read by all classes,—high and low, rich and poor, saint and sinner, Jew and Gentile. The candor, plainness, simplicity and elegance of its style and sentiment, must commend it to every man's conscience, as proceeding from no corrupt or unintelligent source. The GUARDIAN will send it from the Frontier, Eastward across the Atlantic. The STAR will cause it to shine over England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, while the scattered Apostles on Europe's shores will translate and publish it in all those countries, and cause it to be sent to the Islands of the Eastern Seas,—to the East and West Indies,—to the South Sea and Pacific Isles; and finally, to all the world. Editors in the United States, friendly to the prosperity of the western Valleys, we think will be inclined to give it a place in their columns.

The feelings of the people of Utah in relation to the late acts of Congress, and the appointments of the Executive are clearly manifested in the warmest terms of approval and satisfaction. No people can ever be destroyed who sustain a Prophet of God; and the Union can hardly perish while a Prophet-land is cherished and sustained by the satellites that compose her system. Nevertheless, let the Elders abroad in the United States and Canadas urge the gathering of the Saints westward, —while the emigration from England will be stayed until further orders.

Arise ye Saints of Latter Day,
And gird the Gospel Armor on;
Do not forget to watch and pray,
While you are gathering into one.

Gamblers.

We received from St. Joseph, Mo., by the last mail, a communication warning the people of Kanesville against two noted gamblers, whose character and conduct in that city had rendered them fit subjects to leave.

The name of one is Rollins, the other Miller. The latter is said to have been decoyed by Rollins, to aid him in his burglary, thimble, and black-leg transactions. It is said by our informants, that Rollins had been driven away by the citizens of St. Joseph, two or three times, previous to his last exit from that place, on account of his thimbling and black-leg depredations upon a few of the unwary citizens of that place. We must acknowledge, that we are not in favor of driving people, or compelling them to leave our town, if they behave themselves in a manner becoming gentlemen, and good citizens; but at the same time, let burglars, thieves, black-legs and thimblers, beware, for we can assure them that every eye will be directed to see, and every ear open to hear, where such characters may be found; and in conjunction, the officers of the county are on the alert, ready to jump upon all such, like "ducks" upon so many June "bugs." If we are correctly informed, one of these base characters was detected the other day, in the act of pocketing a V, but measures were immediately taken to recover the sum, which proved effectual, and which no doubt astonished our "NEW COMER."

The citizens of this place should guard against all such specimens of depravity, weakness and folly, and let them gloriously alone, to eat each other up, like so many Kilkenny cats, then their friends and patrons may pocket the leavings.

And if the officers of the County do not put the Vagrant Law in force against such loathsome and miserable specimens of human depravity, we will vote to have them cashiered.

Mails.

Our mails from the East and South, are on the delinquent list. The eastern mail by way of Fort Desmoine, which was due last Saturday, has not arrived, neither heard from up to date. The southern mail, due at this place last Friday noon, was brought in by Mr. Jackson on Saturday evening, and he states that Keg Creek was so very high, that the driver had to raft the mail bags across.

The mail due on Monday evening from the South has not yet made its appearance.

From the unusual quantity of rain which has fallen within the last ten days the streams around us have overflowed their banks, sweeping before them bridges, and damaging the roads in such a manner, as to render traveling at present utterly impossible. Here we are by ourselves, securely hemmed in on every side by the loss of bridges, and the damage done to the roads; without mails to give us the news, or any to tell us what our neighbours are doing outside.

Hon. A. W. Babbitt and Company.

The latest intelligence received from the above named Company, consisting of about one hundred and fifty wagons, is, that they were at or near the Elk Horn River, on a small Island completely surrounded by water, with little or no chance to go or return, and the water still rising by the recent heavy rains. It was thought by the parties who brought the information that they were rather in a perilous situation. Several of their wagons were up to the axletree in water, and their teams and stock with little or no feed were seriously exposed, unless timely assistance interposed to rescue them from the jaws of Death. Hon. B. D. Harris, from Vermont, Secretary for the Territory of Utah, lady and family are there; also Dr. John M. Bernhisel, Judge Snow, lady and family, and Messrs. Day & Rose, Indian Agents for said Territory, are among the number comprising this company, and must feel not a little embarrassed in their present situation, not being accustomed to the hair-breadth escapes,—the multiplied inconveniences and vexations, incidental to a life across the plains at this season of the year. We feel sorry for their wives and little ones, and also for themselves, and would be glad to have the opportunity of rendering them assistance or relief in their present perplexing condition; but it being the very time that every nerve, bone and sinew of our body are called into action, and all the force that we can muster beside, to get matters regulated here, and the emigration to the Valley off in time. We have not a leisure moment to spare.

But in conclusion we feel to note one remark made in our office, in presence of Messrs. Rose & Harris, just previous to their leaving. It was on the occasion of some Indians being rather unceremoniously whipped out of town:—That men possessing certain feelings and principles would not prosper in their journey over the plains—that their way would be hedged up, &c. We only regret that the scripture declaration touching this matter has not been fulfilled. "Whether there be tongues they shall cease, whether their be prophecies they shall fail, &c." Gladly would we be called a false Prophet in some things, if that fact could contribute to the comfort and speed of the officers of Utah on their journey to their Official Stations.

Notice.

The press of business, and the importance of doing all things in order, will compel us to close our office at 2 o'clock, P. M., on the day previous to the publication of this paper. Proof and correction,—making up the home and foreign mails in order, without confusion or mistake, compel us to adopt this course.

New Firm.

Our friend and fellow townsman, Mr. S. W. Williams, who has gained, by his gentlemanly conduct, the confidence and good-will of the people, as clerk in the house of Dounel, Stutsman & Co., is now opening an extensive Drug Store on Hyde-Street, a little South of Joseph A. Kelting's establishment, in company with Dr. McMahon, under the firm of McMahon & Williams. They have a choice lot of medicines, paints, oils, &c.; and from the acquaintance we have with these gentlemen, we are confident they will be a valuable accession to this new country. They have our good wishes for their success. They will probably tell their own story in the next Guardian. In the mean time, call and look at their fine and useful articles. Perfumery and lots of other nice things.

Communications.

We have received a very well written article from Fremont, upon the influence of a name, signed (L.) It will be attended to in our next. Also a communication from "Equitus." This will not long be omitted. The Valley news is now at hand, and we must send that out at all hazards.

Court in Fremont.

Last week was Court Week in Fremont. There was not much business done, for the same reason that there was not much done here. There was not much to do. With the exception of some little informality respecting certificates of the election of officers: and more particularly respecting the election of "Prosecuting Attorney;"—Some little warmth of feeling was manifested about the decision of the court touching these things. With this exception, all things went off quietly and peaceably, and there was no trouble in this—all arose from a misunderstanding; and in the end, everything was satisfactory so far as we have learned. We cannot impeach Mr. Rector's conscientiousness in expressing his fears; but it has turned ont as we anticipated at the Convention: His fears were ill-founded. We believed there was too much good sense in the people of Fremont to allow any such proceedings as that gentleman seemed to anticipate and predict. It has turned out as we expected and verily believed; and it only proves that Mr. R. was mistaken, a thing that the best of men are subject to.

Died,

In this Town of Billious Fever and inflamation of the heart, on the 18th inst., W. M. LECOMPTE Esq., a worthy young gentleman, who had just established himself in this place, as an Attorney and Counsellor at Law. His modest and unassuming manner, strict attention to his own business, harmless, mild and temperate in character and deportment, secured to him the good-will of all who made his acquaintance during the short time he was permitted to live in our midst. He bade fair for usefulness as a Citizen and Attorney. We called to see him during his illness, when a little out of his head. He called for his Father and his Mother to come to him: But he is gone! and though none of his relatives were present to sympathize with him in his last hours, he had many friends here who sympathized with him, and who sorely regret his being thus cut down in early life.

Dubuque Herald.

The Fourth number of this paper is before us. It is edited by Messrs. Holt & Mahoney, of Dubuque. The character of the paper is neutral in politics, and devoted to Foreign and Domestic News, Science, Literature, &c. From the notoriety gained by these two gentlemen, while associated with the Miner's Express, we cannot doubt for a moment, that their high-minded views and talent will be copiously diffused through the columns of the Herald, to all who may feel willing to honor them with their patronage. The sheet presents a neat and clean appearance; ably edited; and the mechanical part remarkably well executed. We wish them much success in the enterprise.

From St. Joseph, Missouri.

Leonard Smith and Lady, and Company, passed through Kanesville, on Thursday, May 15th, on their road to Salt Lake. All well.

Also Mr. Horace M. Frink, from Missouri.

Arrivals.

The steamer Statesman, from St. Louis, thirteen days out, arrived at Kanesville Landing, on Tuesday the 20th inst., having on board a company of Saints, under the care of Elder Alexander Robbins, late President of the St. Louis Conference. Among the number of passengers were President Orson Pratt from the British Isles, his lady and family, en route for the Valley, in good health and spirits; Silas P. Barnes Esq., from Boston, lady and family, Elder James McGaw, one of our misionaries from Texas, and our celebrated French missionary, William Howell, and family. The latter is the gentleman who was so very successful in making converts crossing the Atlantic on board the ship Olympus, while on their way from Liverpool to New Orleans. We are informed that there were only fifty-two passengers on board the Olympus, who did not belong to the Church, with the exception of the Captain and Crew, and out of that number fifty were baptised into the Church before they arrived at New Orleans, and no less singular is a circumstance that occurred on the Statesman after her arrival here; her cooks and deck hands left her, preferring rather to be teamsters across the plains for the Mormons, and have their society in fair Utah, than remain any longer as cooks and deck hands on the muddy waters of the Missouri. We wish those Pioneers much success, and all good and honest people, whose confidence and esteem may have been gained by a walk and conversation becoming the Gospel of Christ.

The Robert Campbell arrived on Wednesday the 21st., at the same place with a large company of Saints from England, Scotland, &c., under the watchcare and direction of Elder George D. Watt, our able Phonographic Writer, and Lecturer. A goodly number of both companies are destined for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake this season, and the balance will remain in this, and surrounding counties of Western Iowa for the time being, to raise wheat, corn, potatoes, &c. Samuel Bird, assisted by Thomas Wilson and John Hawkins, brought a company of thirty-six persons from Cleveland, Ohio; eight of whom remained in St. Louis, being unable to proceed any further on their journey for the want of means. All the Saints who have got this far on their journey, seem to be anxious to get to the end of it; but the weather being so very unfavorable for the last ten days, they are compelled to lie on their oars a short time much against their will; but they believe that all will work together for good to those who love God, and are the called according to his purpose; therefore they endure adverse circumstances the more patiently, because they know they shall reap the benefit if they faint not.

SALE OF TOWN LOTS.

THERE will be sold at the County Seat of Fremont County, State of Iowa, a large number of town lots on the 30th Day of June, 1851.

We deem it proper to say that Fremont is the southwest County in the State of Iowa, bordering upon the Missouri river. The county seat has been recently located by Commissioners, appointed for that purpose, within one mile of the centre of said county, upon the Stage route from St. Joseph to Kanesville, 12 miles east of old Fort Kearney, upon an elevated ridge between the Missouri and Nichnabotna rivers, surrounded by a country unsurpassed in fertility of soil, or beauty of scenery, with agricultural, mechanical and commercial advantages surpassed by none, and equalled by few new counties. At the organization of the county in August, 1849, it contained 400 inhabitants, which has now arisen to 1,500.

Terms liberal, and made known on the day of sale. THOMAS M. GORDON, } County

Drowned.

On Saturday last, a Mr. Douglass, of this town, started, with a load of passengers to Bethlehem, as we were told, and the bridge being gone over the slough between this and Trading Point, his team plunged into the deep water, and were struggling without being able to touch the bottom. Mr. D. being anxious to save his animals, sprang in to their aid, when he was probably kicked by the struggling horses, disabled, and sank down, came up once, sank again to rise no more. The passengers extricated themselves; but the team, wagon, and owner have not since been seen. They probably floated into the Missouri, and are gone. To us Mr. D. was a stranger; had just come into town, purchased him a home, was trying to get an honest living; but has been thus suddenly taken away, leaving an interesting family to mourn his loss. He was not of the Mormon people; yet had settled here with the design to remain.

Thus is man ensnared and taken,
Oft when prospects swell his hopes;
And the wife and child forsaken,
Caused by death's relentless stroke.
Dry your tears, ye weeping mourners,
Death, the tyrant, must be slain;
Though your hearts are sad with anguish,
Christ, your Lord, in triumph reigns.

Beware of Two Men.

They are suspicious characters, and roving about to steal and plunder. They have given too clear proofs of their guilt and depravity. They give no evidence of reform, but are believed to be lurking about, covered with blankets in the character of Indians. They steal Bacon, horses, and force cattle to swim the Missouri River. They leave their clothes by the River's bank, and are singularly seated and in by places. It is said that a boy was shipped to death by one of them, and the other is a good Musician. We would withhold their names for their relation's sake; yet publish them to warn an outraged community to stamp the vipers under their feets. Cursed children, who have forsaken the right way, and gone after that which is unseemly. Till they repent, the place where they are is cursed to them They may look for evil and not for good. We would have saved and rescued them if they would: But alas! They have chosen their own way, and in their own doings shall they be ensnared.

Weather.

It has rained, thundered, and lightened almost every day for the last three weeks. Such a time has not been known since the settlement of this country. Every mill-dam is carried away, and some mills with much grain. Bridges are all swept and much damage is done to fences and roads. But little grain is, as yet, put in the ground.

Rain, rain, thunder and lightning enough to rend the heavens and the earth, are of almost every day's occurred. Close and sultry.

East Indies.

Late advices from Bombay report, that the cholera is raging there with fearful violence, Twenty five hundred persons are said to have died with it in one month. The destroyer is on his way among all nations, reaping with fearful virulence, priest and people, without the least respect to party distinction, or sectional formality.

G. S. L. City, Utah Territory, March 26th, 1851.

SPECIAL MESSAGE,

To the General Assembly of the State of Deseret.

Gentlemen:—Whereas, the Congress of the United States passed an Act, Sept. 9th, 1850, and received the approval of the Presidsint to "establish a Territorial Government for Utah," and made appropriations for erecting public buildings for said Territory, &c. The appointments under said law also having been made, official announcement of which has not as yet been received, but are shortly expected; sufficient intelligence, however, has been received to justify us in preparing for the adoption and organization of the new Government under said Act.

I have therefore thought proper to suggest to you, previous to your final adjournment, the propriety of making such arrangements, as in wisdom you may consider necessary, in view of the aforesaid Act of Congress; that as little inconvenience as possible may arise in the change of Governmental affairs, and in relation to the organizatin of the Territorial Government, for erecting public buildings for said Territory, &c.

And now, upon the dissolving of this Legislature, permit me to add, the industry and unanimity which have ever characterized your efforts, and contributed so much to the pre-eminent success of this Government, will, in all future time, be a source of gratification to all; and whatever may be the career and destiny of this Young, but growing Republic, we can ever carry with us the proud satisfaction of having erected, established, and maintained a peaceful, quiet, yet energetic Government, under the benign auspices of which, unparalleled prosperity has showered her blessings upon every interest.

With sentiments of the highest esteem and gratitude to the Giver of all good for His kind blessings, I remain,

Respectfully yours,
BRIGHAM YOUNG.
Governor.

The Legislature of Deseret, in joint session, March 28th, 1851, unanimously passed the following Preamble and Resolutions, pertaining to the organization of a Territorial Government for Utah:

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, in the winter and spring of A. D. 1849, the people of this Territory did form and establish a Provisional State Government, until the United States Congress should otherwise provide by law for the Government of this Territory; and

Whereas, it was under this authority and by virtue thereof, that this body have acted and legislated, for and in behalf of the people of said State, now Utah Territory; and

Whereas, the United States Congress has finally legislated in behalf of this Territory, by passing an Act for the organization of the Territory of Utah; making appropriations for public buildings; and extending the Constitution of the United States over said Territory; and

Whereas, previous to the first election under said law, the census has to be taken, and apportionments made, which will necessarily consume much time; and

Whereas, the public buildings for said Territory are very much needed, and the United States Congress having made an appropriation of twenty thousand dollars towards defraying the expense thereof, and in order to facilitate the speedy erection of said public buildings for the use of the Territory, and further promote the mutual and easy organization of said Territorial Government.

Therefore, be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Deseret.

1. That we cheerfully and cordially accept of the legislation of Congress in the Act to establish a Territorial Government for Utah.

2. That we welcome the Constitution of the United States—the legacy of our fathers, over this Territory.

3. That all officers under the Provisional State Government of Deseret, are hereby requested to furnish unto their successors in office every facility in their power, by returning and delivering unto them public documents, laws, ordinances, and dockets, that may or can be of any use or benefit to their said successors in office.

4. That Union Square, in G. S. L. City by devoted for the use of public buildings of said Territory.

5. That Gov. B. Young be our agent to make drafts upon the treasury of the United States for the amount appropriated for said buildings, and to take such other measures as he shall deem proper for their immediate erection.

6. That we appoint an architect to draft designs, and a committee of one, to superintend the erection of said buildings.

7. That Truman O. Angel, of said City, be said Architect; and Daniel H. Wells, of said City, the committee; and that they proceed immediately to the designing and erection of said buildings.

8. That, whereas, the State House in Great Salt Lake City having been originally designed for a "Council House," and erected by and at the expense of the "Church of Jesus Church of Latter-day Saints," for the purpose, as well as to accommodate the Provisional Government,—that we now do relinquish unto said Church the aforesaid building; tendering unto them our thanks for the free use thereof, during the past session.

9. That we fix upon Saturday, the 5th day of April next, for the adjustment and final dissolving of the General Assembly of the State of Deseret.

H. C. KIMBALL.
President of the Senate.
J. M. GRANT,
Speaker of the House.
T. Bullock, Clerk.

Charleston, S. C., May 5th.

The South Carolina Southern Rights Association Convention, composed of delegates appointed by the various Southern Rights Associations of the State, met in this City and was duly organized by the appointment of the following officers: President Ex-Gov. Richards; Vice Presidents, Ex-Gov. W. C. Seabrook, J. J. Ashen, N. L. Griffin, J. W. Simpson, R. H. Goodwin, B. K. Hannegan, and W. H. Gist; Secretaries, the Editors of the Greenville Mountaineer, Camden Journal, Black River Journal, Edgefield Advertiser, Chester Standard and J. C. Walker.

There are forty associations represented, and the Convention is composed of four hundred and thirty-one delegates.

The President, ex-Governor Richardson, on taking the chair, calmly, but temperately, reviewed the position of affairs. He considered that southern institutions, under existing circumstances, could not last twenty years. He alluded forcibly to the disregard of blood and treasusure expended in the acquisition of territory, and her subsequent exclusion from those territories, and said, when dangers threatening our existence thus reach our very doors, it was time to arm against them. It was futile to hope that the Constitution, based upon such legislation, could survive. Concession could yield nothing to its support. The deliberations of the Convention, he said, should be confined the when, where and how resistance should be made, though he supposed it should not be adopted rashly. He, however, would not discuss that, as he did not desire to bias them. He loved the Union; he did not believe that there was an amateur disunionist among them; he advocated union among ourselves; if any are forming in our rear, he said, let us await their approach. If in our van, let us make up to them. It has been said that whom God and Nature join together, men could not put asunder; but the reverse may also be applied. Those whom God and Nature has put asunder, let no man join together. He then argued at length on the want of affinity between the two sections of country, and advised earnest and temperate deliberation.

The Convention then adjourned. The votes to-morrow will settle the question of nullification. The President is a strong Union man. The Convention embraces many men of talents.

[By the O'Rielly Line.]

Charleston, May 6th.

Proceedings in the Convention to-day authorise us to announce that a separate State action will certainly triumph by an overwhelming majority. The reception of Rhett's resolution has been fearfully enthusiastic. Langdon Cheves and Judge Butler, who were in favor of moderation, are borne down. South Carolina is fixed for secession. Great excitment has prevailed to-day throughout the City.

Still Later.

Charleston, May 7th.

Langdon Cheves has addressed the Convention, opposing the separate action of South Carolina. The Convention have reported addresses and resolutions, which have not yet come up for consideration. The number of delegates to-day was 368, representing all parts of the State.

Mormons.

The steamer Atlantic arrived yesterday morning from New Orleans, having on board two hundred and forty Mormon emigrants. This company sailed from Liverpool on board the ship Olimpus. They had a very prosperous and healthy voage, having but two deaths, and those young children. There being several passengers on board the ship who did not belong to the Mormon faith, the Mormons began the work of preaching and proselyting; and their efforts were not unfruitful, for they succeded in gaining over to their faith about fifty persons, who were baptized on board the ship. Part of those who arrived on the Atlantic were detained at the Quarantine, on account of a man being sick of what was supposed to be cholera.

The Statesman did not leave yesterday, as was stated, but is expected to leave to-day, having on board two hundred passengers. These are mostly Mormon emigrants, who arrived here a few days ago from the New England States, and the remainder are from his city, among whom is Alexander Robbins, the late President of this city.

The Mormons in this city and neighbourhood number about three thousand. They have a good organization, the head of which is styled a President; the present incumbent is Elder Thomas Wrigley. They hold meetings regularly on Sundays, at Concert Hall.—[Organ and Reveille, May 9th, 1851.

E. H. HAYCRAFT, having purchased the interest of Dr. J. B. HOWARD in the Drug Store of Haycraft & Howard, still continue the Drug business at the old stand where he will be much pleased to see all the former customers of the house.

He wishes it to be distinctly understood that he will sell as cheap as good articles in his line can be sold in Upper Missouri; and if an article is not as is represented it may be returned.

As all of his sales are made for cash in hand he can afford to sell very low, and he invites the attention of his customers to this particular fact.

He is the wholesale agent for JOHN BULL'S and S. P. TOWNSEND'S SARSAPARILLA. Receiving his supplies directly from the Proprietor's, and can furnish them at St. Louis Wholesale prices, thus saving the expense of freight, and risk in transportation.

The celebrated Mexican Mustang Liniment is also offered by the dozen or gross at the wholesale rates.

POETRY.

Liking and Disliking.

BY CHAS. SWAIN.

Ye who know the reason, tell me,
How it is that instinct still
Prompts the heart to like—or not like—
At its own capricious will!
Tell me by what hidden magic
Our impressions first are led
Into likings—or dislikings—
Oft before a word is said?

Why should smiles sometimes repel us;
Bright eyes turn our feelings cold?
What is that which comes to tell us
All that glitters is not gold?
Oh, no feature, plain or striking,
But a power we cannot shun,
Prompts our liking, or disliking,
Ere acquaintance hath begun!

It is instinct—or some spirit
Which prompts us and controls
Every impulse we inherit
By some sympathy of souls?
Is it instinct? is it nature?
Or some freak or fault of chance,
Which our liking or disliking,
Limits to a single glance?

Like presentiment of danger,
Though the sky no shadow flings;
Or that inner sense, still stranger,
Of unseen—unutter'd things?
Is it—oh, can no one tell me—
No one show sufficient cause
Why our likings—and dislikings—
Have their own instinctive laws?

MISCELLANY.

Falling in Love.

BY NED ALBRO.

Well, here I am like a bank panic. This is me clean up to the handle, and chock up to the brim. How'd do? As for myself I'm like Atherton's boy, when he slipped inter the bar'l o' soft soap—slick as a bear's ribs. Now tis mor'n wonderful to obsarve the doin's o' human nature. I've played hoss with a trip hammer, an' seen a hen hawk whet his bill against a pile o' clam shells. But when it comes to this ere love business, I swan to man it gits me awful. Now if a fe'l'r happens to ring in with a leetle chick-a-dee-dee he's got to either come to the pint, or pack up his duds an' strike out for parts unknown. I went to see a little critter of a gal onst. Betsy Davis, and—oh Je ru sa lem, she was a scrouger. Talk 'bout Moses in the bull-rushes, jehu! if a feller'd see that gal onst he'd melt shure. She could give sich patent looks, and kinder snicker so allfiredly-it would take a pretty strong constitutioned feller to stand it. Now, I 'member onst I went to see that gal' one night, when the old folks was gone to camp meetin', an' the young uns had gone to roost up in the cock loft. When I got there, I hitched the nag to the fence elevated my standin' collar to look kinder scrumschus, an' then I spurges in as spunky as a bee hive an' twice as nateral. Betsy—bless her leetle shadder, was mixing up buckwheat cakes for mornin'. Jest as quick as she seen me she color'd up as red as a biled beet. I commenced shakin' like a bob tailed hen with the palsy, an' kinder backed out; 'cause if she'd gin another sich look, I'd been a gone goslin. I'd got so fur, an' I jest concluded I'd buck up or swing for't. So I took a cheer an' set down 'bout a rod from Bets an' she squatted bout a rod from me, on a milk piggin, she commenced a snikerin' an' I commenced lookin' kinder most awful bilious. Oh thunder an' lightnin'! how I did feel, I was the darndest predickament. Jest as I'se a goin' to say sunthin' she bust out a jigglin'. Je-whittaker-whew! I lay, I was excited so I jest give her a smack s-o-o-p as meek and lowly as a malo kitten! double distilled essence o' hoarhound! 'twas sweeter'n cider out'n the bung o' a bar'l O Jupiter H Codfish! if a feller could eat such things with a spoon! I was fallin' in love by the pailfull, I could'nt stan' it—so I picked up my hat and skated. Betsy was too big a pile o' mus'melons for the present generation, but there's Beck Wilson, she's most as tantalizin' as she is. Little Ike Hewitt courted that gal, but it ollers made him k'nder sickly. He had to drop off, 'cause he said he'd be in love to the eyebrows if he hung to it. An' there's Phebe Macumber's the bare-footed one—Sufferony, she's considerable, but she piles on the love so almighty thick. Law Z! when she gets agoin' she's a perfect israel an' a whole team. She an' one o' Peterkin's boys went to a dance, an' when they got there she stuck fast in the door, she could'nt budge an inch, so the fellers went to kissin'. One feller kissed her sixty-nine times, an' 'cause he would'nt do it some more she had lip enough to cut a pair of boot legs off of. The feller had to navigate, 'cause he said he could'nt do it any more, her breath tasted jest like onions. The great fool or't to piled another dozen, it would'nt hurt him a mite. Now there's Nancy-Hewitt—Ike's sister, a feller could kiss her from now till the day o' Pentecost, but she'd never git sufficient. That's the identical gal that licked a nanny goat to death in a few rounds, an' she can snake a bar'l o' cider a rod jest as easy. Her old man had a couple o' almighty cross bone hunters, an' when a feller'd show himself 'bout them latitudes he'd git himself nipped the cussedest.

One dandyfied lookin' kinder of a sucker, a regular pusillanimous bob-tailed pimp o' misery, went to saying sunthin' to Nance 'bout nuptial affairs. It riz Nance rite up to the hub, and she stickt' the dogs on him Sled crooks an' sweet briars, I never see a feller shoot so, since I tramped the face o' this continental arth. Nance huv a gridiron at him when he's leavin'. It struck him plum, an' he bounced 10 foot every pop. The way he lifted his walkin' beams an' paddled was some to a trip hammer. An' now in conclusion, I'd advise fellers not to get any further in the eyebrows, 'cause if they do they've got to hitch on or make themselves acquainted with the hemp cravat business, an' that's worse'n the yaller janders, 'specially if he's got a sore throat. An' as for the gals, you little tantalizin' chicks' you, I hope to be teetotally used up if I can think o' anything good enough to say.

Williamsburgh, L. I., 1850

Mind Against Mind.

There is a strong disposition in men of opposite minds to dispise each other. A grave man cannot conceive what is the use of wit in society; a person who takes a strong, common sense view of the subject, is for pushing out by the head and shoulders, an ingenious theorist who catches at the slightest and faintest analogies; and another man who scents the rediculous from afar, will hold no commerce with him who tests exquisitely the fine feeling of the heart, and is alive to nothing else; whereas, talents is talent, and mind is mind, in all its branches. Wit gives to life one of its best flavors; common sense leads to immediate action, and gives society its daily motion; large and comprehensive views of its annual rotation; ridicule chastises folly and impudence, and keeps men in their proper sphere; subtlety seizes hold of the fine threads of truth; analogy darts away to the most sublime discoveries; feeling paints all the exquisite passions of man's soul, and rewards him by a thousand inward visitations for the sorrows that come from without. God made it all. It is all good! We must despire no sort of talent; they all have their seperate duties and uses; all the happiness of man for their object; they all improve, exalt, and gladden life. SIDNEY SMITH.

Eloquence of a Thunderer.

One Paul Denton, a methodist preacher in Texas, advertised a barbacue, with better liquor than usually furnished. When people were assembled, a desperado in the crowd cried out, "Mr. Paul Denton, your reverence has lied. You promised us not only a good barbacue, but better liquor. Where is the liquor?" "There!" answered the missionary, in tones of thunder, and (says a Yankee contemporary) pointed his motionless finger at the matchless double spring, gushing up in two strong columns, with a sound like a shout of joy from the bosom of the earth. "There!" he repeated, with a look terrible as the lightning, (while his enemy actually trembled on his feet,) "there is the liquor which God the Eternal, brews for all his children!"

Not in the simmering still, over smoky fires, choked with poisonous gasses, and surrounded with the stench of sickening odors and rank corruptions, doth your Father in heaven prepare this precious essence of life, the pure cold water; but in the green glade and grassy dell where the red deer wanders, and the child loves to play—there God brews it; and down, low down in the deepest valleys, where the fountains murmur and the rills sing, and high upon the tall mountain tops, where the naked granite glitters like gold in the sun, where the storm cloud broods and the thunder storms crash, and away, far out on the wide, wild sea, where the hurricane howls music, and the big waves roar the chorus, sweeping the march of God—there he brews it, that beverage of life—healthful water.

And every where it is a thing of beauty; gleaming in the dew-drop singing in the summer rain; shining in the ice gem, till the trees all seem turned to living jewels; spreading a golden veil over the setting sun, or a white gauze around the midnight moon; sporting in the cataract; sleeping in the glacier; dancing in the hail showers; folding its bright snow curtains softly about the wintry world; and weaving the many-colored iris, that seraph's zone of the sky—whose warp is the rain-drop of earth, whose woof is the sun beam of heaven—all checked over with the celestial flowers, by the mystic hand of refraction. Still always it is beautiful—that blessed life water! No poison bubbles on its brink; its foam brings no madness or murder; no blood stains its liquid glass; pale widows and starving orphans weep no burning tears in its depths; no drunkard's shrieking ghost from the grave curses it in words of eternal despair! Speak out my friends! would you exchange it for the demons drink alcohol? A shout like the roar of a tempest answered—"No!"

Growlers.

There is a class of men in every community who go about with vinegar faces, growling because some body feels above them; or because they are not appreciated as they should be, and who have a constant quarrel with their destiny. These men usually have made a very grave mistake in the estimate of their abilities, or are mitigated asses. In either case they are unfortunate. Wherever this fault-finding with one's condition or position occurs there is always a want of selfrespect. If people despise you, do not tell of it all over town, if you are smart show it. Do something and keep doing. If you are a right down clever fellow wash the wormwood off your face, and show your good will by your deeds. Then, if people feel above you go straight off and feel above them. If they turn up their noses because you are a mechanic or a farmer or a shop boy turn up yours a notch higher. If they swell when they pass you in the street swell yourself and if this does not fetch them, conclude very good naturedly that they are unworthy of your accquaintance, and pity them for missing such a capital chance to get into good society.

Society never estimates a man at what he imagins himself to be. He must show himself to be possessed of self-respect, independence, energy to will and to do, and a good sound heart. These qualities and possessions will "put him through."

Who blames a man for feeling above those who are mean enough to go round like babies telling how people abuse them and whining because society will not take them by the collar and drag them into decency.—[Capital Reporter.

Three students at college met an aged countryman, and wishing to have a little sport with him, thus accosted him. The first said—"Good morning father Abraham," the second, "Good morning, father Isaac," and the third, "Good morning father Jacob," the old gentleman replied, "I am neither Abraham, Isaac, nor Jacob; but I am Saul the son of Kish, who went to seek his father's asses, and lo! I have found three of them."

Dubuque, Fort Des Moines, and Council Bluffs.

The eastern, and western termini of the great Iowa Railroad are indicated by these points not only by public opinion, but by the topography of the country through which a central road hence westward must pass.

In veiw of this fact, it becomes a matter of some consequence to the people of Fort desmoines and Council Bluffs vicinities to shape their future action so as to facilitate this result desirable alike to them and to Dubuque. They should not only keep themselves well informed of what is being done here to effect this object, but they should also co-operate, if not pecuniarily at least in sentiment and desire, with whatever has a tendency to unite them to the east through Dubuque.

When the Dubuque and Keokuk railroad North reaches Cedar Rapids, the people westward should be ready to carry it forward on the way towards its final destination on the shores of the pacific. Every exertion short of doing violence to one's self, should be devoted to this object, for without this, its successful accomplishment will be too long deferred.

Some may say that the country westward will not support a railroad. We reply, make the road and it will support the country. It will be like giving a soul to a new body, without which it was a mere corpse'—a nothing in existence—but with which it becomes a being conscious of life. So will it be with our western prairies, when the shrill whistle of the locomotive signals the coming of the masses of human beings continually moving westward in search of freer homes.

Without human appendages the most beautiful is but a blank in existence. Its foliage has no beauty unless gazed upon by a human eye, its herbage but little taste except for human palates. For man were they specially formed. He alone can enjoy their beauty and their use, and he above all others should posess them.

Every thing that facilitates this beneficent design should be undertaken by the race and carried into effect, and nothing seems to be more certain of accomplising this design than the construction of a means of ingress and egress by which mankind can enter upon their great inheritance from the Father, and send back into the world behind them the fruits of their industry.

For this we want a railroad through our State to Council Bluffs on the Missouri. It is the duty of the present age to accomplish this result it will be for those who appear upon the stage of life farther west to carry it on to its final and fixed destination.—[Dubuque Herald.

Live for Something.

Thousands of men breathe, move and live—pass off the stage of life and are heard of no more. Why? They did not a particle of good in the world; and none were blessed by them, none could point to them as the justment of their redemption; not a line they wrote, not a word they spoke could be recalled, and so they perished, their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die, Oh man immortal! Live for something. Do good and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storm of time can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of thousands you come in contact year by year, and you never will be forgotten. No, your name—your deeds—will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, and the stars on the brow of the evening. Good deeds will shine as brightly on the earth as the stars of heaven.—[Dr. Chalmers.

What we Call Duties.

Every man ought to pay his debts—if he can.

Every man ought to help his neighbor—if he can.

Every young man and woman ought to get married—if they can.

Every representative in Congress, and the legislature ought to inform their constituents what they are doing—if they can.

Every man should do his work to please his customers—if he can.

Every wife should sometimes hold her tongue—if she can.

Every lawyer should tell the truth—if he can.

Every preacher of the gospel should be a Christian—if he can.

And finally every reader should add to the above something good—if he can.

More Manuscripts Discovered.

We learn from a Constantinople letter of the 15th ult., in the Risorgimento of Turin, that public attention has been greatly excited there, by the discovery of an immence treasure of Greek manuscripts, of the highest antiquity, found by a learned Greek of the name of Simonides, in a cave situate at the foot of Mount Athos. According to this account, the importance of this discovery is incalculable, since it brings to light a vast quantity of celebrated works quoted by various ancient writers, and hitherto deemed entirely lost. They furnish, as may be imagined, an extensive list of proper names, calculated to throw great light upon many obscure periods of history. Among these precious volumes, which are composed of very thin membranes, (the nature of which is not stated,) filled with microscopic characters, some are calculated to give a complete interpretation of hieroglyphic writing, the fortunate discoverer having already successfully applied them to the interpretation of the inscriptions engraved on the obelisk of the Hippodrome at Constantinople.

Extracts of a Letter from Elder George A. Smith, Dated

CEDAR CITY, IRON COUNTY,
March 25th, 1851.

PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG:—By the express which starts to-day for your City, I send you a few items regarding our situation, location, and the facilities which surround us for our operations; though by the brethren you may learn many minute particulars I have not space to give you; for these I refer you to Br. Anson Call, and Capt. A. L. Fullmer. We are progressing rapidly in our farming operations, having already sown four hundred acres of wheat, and they will probably amount to one thousand. The soil is considered of the first quality, both upland and wire grass, by our best farmers—no division of opinion regarding soil. There have been about sixteen hundred acres surveyed, and the probability is that it will nearly all be cultivated this season. Our fencing and public buildings are in a state of progression, as well as private buildings composing the Fort. This will be enclosed either by buildings or pickets by the first of July. It is in a good state of forwardness, considering the amount of labor bestowed upon making roads into kanyons, and our farming operations.

There seems to be a good feeling pervading the Camp. We have done but little in making explorations; but from what we have found of lime, stone, alum, and timber, the easy access to each give indications of this becoming a rapid growing settlement. Our saw-mill is also in a state of forwardness, and will soon be in operation; but we need a good mill-wright here very much.

The weather since our arrival, has been very favorable; but at present the ground is dry. The health of the Camp is good, and two children have been added to our numbers; they are doing well.

If some thirty or more could be induced to come on this spring, before high water, we could then be secure; and I would recommend Br. Call as a suitable person to bring the company through as captain or pilot.

Many of the brethren are very anxious to return early and get their families before winter; and if this addition shall be made to our numbers, they could be released. I had some thoughts of coming through to conference myself, a violent cold prevents, and I trust to the brethren to give you much information; some of them, however, will plead very hard to be released from returning; but I see no reason why a man who can live like a prince at home, should be released any more than a poor man; but each fill his mission.

Some in Camp complain of their bread stuff being short. I presume it will be before harvest, though the harvest will probably be early. There is considerably wheat up; some barley, and looks well. Those who come on will do well to bring a supply of provisions, as we may have to subsist on meat alone before our harvest.

Walker informs us that Brown was killed by Toquau's band of Pietes on Big Muddy. In the fight with Capt. Winters, (an emigrant company,) there were two Indians killed, and two wounded.

I have only been called upon to lay hands upon two persons since I left the City, and one of these was from pain from the bite of a dog; and the other from over exertion and loss of strength;—they were immediately relieved. How different from times at Nauvoo!

Magnificent Enterprise.

Shaw, Jones & Co.'s Panorama of the Plains, Salt Lake and California

A company of young gentlemen, L. Shaw, J. W. Jones, Jacob Arrick, Joshua Pugh, N. P. Toplin, and S. Shefolt, are now engaged in daguerreotyping all the prominent places in California, including cities, towns and mines, from which a panorama is to be painted. Arrangements have already been made to secure the services of the best artists in the Eastern cities.

Dr. Toplin, a member of the company, will proceed to the States immediately, in charge of this panorama, which is designed to be ready for exhibition early in the coming summer.

At the earliest practicable period, this company will cross the Sierra Nevada, taking Salt Lake en rout for the States, Daguerreotyping every thing of interest, from which it is designed to paint a Panorama upon one mile of canvas, in time for the great exhibition of 1852, at New York. None but the best artists are to be employed upon the work—strictly a National enterprise.

This company commence with a pledged capital of $30,000, with facilities for raising it to any amount necessary to complete the work. Crossing the plains the company will have in its employ from fifteen to twenty men.

A lecturer will accompany the expedition, collecting every thing in a legendary point of veiw, calculated to make the exhibition interesting and menally profitable.—[Sacramento Times.

Whitewash.

It is said that a pint of varnish mixed with a bucket of whitewash, will give it in a great degree the qualities of paint—and it will withstand all kinds of weather. As this is the season for whitewashing, knowledge of the above may be of use.

Christ was born among the poor, grew up among the poor, toiled with the poor, and died for the poor. The cases he ever came in contact with rich men, are noted with emphasis in Scripture, as remarkable exceptions.

A land of liberty and intelligence is a land of newspapers. 'I had rather have newspapers without a government,' said Jefferson, 'than a government without newspapers.'

For the Guardian.

A Chapter on the Influence of Names.

BY L.

"What's in a name? That which we call a rose, by any other name would smell as sweet."—Shakspeare.

Shakspeare was mistaken. There is a great deal,—there is almost everything in names—their influence is felt at all times, and under all circumstances—in war and in peace, in morals, literature and religion,—in the world of fashion,—and above all in politics, the despotism of names is all powerful, universal and irresistible. Nay, even Shakspeare is authority against himself. Does not he make the gentle Juliet say to her lover. "'Tis but thy name that is my enemy"—that fatal name which separated two devoted hearts—which planted thick sorrows in their path, and finally, shrouded them in one common sepulcher! Does he not put into the mouth of one of Anthony's captains. "I'll humbly signify what in his name, that magical word of war, we have effected!" And again, speaking of the great Pompey, "his name strikes more than could his war resisted." Names indeed govern the world; and it is not among the least ingenious of all human contrivances, that the world should be so governed. I do not wish to speak of the moral guilt and future accountability of those who combine to delude the ignorant,— who chain men's minds to some false idol, or enlist them in some scheme of abomination, whose iniquities are artfully veiled under the names of virtue, patriotism, and the like. If the denunciations of the eloquent Hebrew Prophet against those who call evil good, and good evil—who put darkness for light, and light for darkness—who call bitter sweet, and sweet bitter,—are not sufficient to alarm such delinquents, it would avail nothing for uninspired tongues and pens to attempt their conviction and reform.

In literature, how remarkable and how injurious is the influence of names, apart from any actual or intrinsic merit. How common is it to estimate an opinion or sentiment, not by the wisdom of one, or the purity of the other, but by the authority of him who pronounces it. A false, immoral, or stupid passage in a book which bears on its title-page the name of a popular writer, is often received with favor, when percisely the same offence in an unknown author, would be almost certain to bring down upon him the lash of criticism. Take for example one of England's most renowned Bards—one, not more known, even in his own Country, than on this side of the Atlantic—whose "Melodies" are lisped by our amorous Youths and sentimental Maidens, and whose name has become a "household word"—a passport to every festival, where music, love and wine are the sources of enjoyment. Among his "National Airs" so called, Mr. Moore has written the following lines, which have no doubt been admired by every pretty Miss in the country, as the very perfection of poetry, sentiment, and even good sense.

"Flow on, thou shining river,
But, ere thou reach the sea,
Seek Ella's bower, and give her
The wreaths I fling o,er thee.
And tell her thus, if she'll be mine,
The current of our lives shall be,
With joy along their course to shine,
Like those sweet flowers on thee.

But if, in wandering thither,
Thou find'st she mocks my prayer,
Then leave those wreaths to wither,
Upon the cold bank there!
And tell her thus, when youth is o'er,
Her lone and loveless charms shall be,
Thrown by upon life's weedy shore,
Like those sweet flowers from thee."

Now the plain English prose of all this, when divested of the magic of Mr. Moore's numbers, is somewhat like the following.

"Take, gentle river, these pretty flowers that I fling upon thy surface, and before thou reachest the great ocean, be pleased to flow into the bower of my fair Ella; and if it be not marvellous enough, good river, for thee to rush into a Lady's bower, without drowning her, be pleased to perform another wonderful feat, and speak to her,—tell her if she will only marry me, our joys, whilst we are floating down life's current, shall resemble these wreaths which are borne upon thy bosom. But mark me river!—if this insensible girl is resolved that she will not accept offer, why then roar like another cataract, toss these worthless wreaths on the shore, to wither and rot, and tell this cruel Ella that she will live and die an ugly, neglected old maid."

Now, whilst it is conceded that the figure of personification is perfectly legitimate, especially in poetry; yet there are certain degrees of it which should never be attempted, unless connected with subjects of great dignity, or which inspire powerful emotion—and it must not be forgotten that the excellence of poetry does not consist so much in the form or arrangement of its words as in the value and beauty of the thoughts and sentiments which it expresses. A gentle Zephyr stealing into a Lady's bower and lulling her into repose, or whisper into her ears, the sighs of an absent lover, is natural and agreeable enough; but a river turning from its course and performing the same office, is a conception which would be very rediculous in any other than a popular poet.

It would be no difficult task to extend these remarks so as to embrace a long list of distinguished writers, both in prose and verse, who have perpetrated various offences against sound morals as well as good sense, but with whom the lustre of reputation, like the mantle of charity, has not only shielded them from censure, but imparted a kind of dignity and splendor to their failings.

But how is it in the empire of the church? Here, I know I tread on sacred ground, and must use both brevity and caution. That truth exists in religious doctrine as well as in other things, will not be denied, except by unthinking scepticism, or perverted reason. The difficulty has always been in finding her out—in distinguishing her sacred vestments and celestial carriage from the skillful imitations of imposture. The diamond may be known by the tests of experiment, and from the gems which mimic its lustre; but there is no moral chemistry that can separate truth from error, and resolve each into its proper elements. In fact, it seems to be one of the fallacies which has obtained currency among mankind, that truth and error are natural antagonists. So far from it they are scarcely ever found in a state of disunion or repulsion, Error winds itself around the stately column of truth, as the creeper folds in its poisonous embrace the sturdy oak of the forest. What tremendous influence has been wielded by the simple word Church, from the very first nges of christianity down to the present time. The name alone has covered a multitude of sins, and sanctified innumerable crimes. What torrents of blood have been shed under the crimson banner of orthodoxy, and how meek and conscientious heretics have fled from the tender embrace of that holy and infallible mother, who has assumed the supreme government of the soul in this world, as well as the direction of its immortal destiny hereafter. But I only dwell upon this subject in order to show how much we are deceived by empty, unmeaning names. That there is such a treasue as "pure and undefiled religion," none but the hardened infidel or remorseless libertine will deny. That it is always necessarily found under the priestly robe, or connected with the "sober brow," neither candor nor charity itself will contend for,—and yet, some how or other, the world has identified the sacred gift with a certain sanctimonious exterior, and with certain peculiar ceremonials, and there are few, perhaps, who reflect that it may be more frequently traced in the abodes of humility and wretchedness, in the sight of a contrite heart, and in the tears of penitential guilt.

But how is it with the word fashion? What is fashion? Many attempts have been made to define what in truth is undefinable. It is an empty name, a mere shadow, and yet it is of substance sufficient to be felt and seen and understood almost everywhere. A popular English novelist, writing of his own country, says:—"The middle classes interest themselves in grave matters: the aggregate of their sentiments is called OPINION. The great interest themselves in frivalities, and the aggregate of their sentiments is termed FASHION. The first is the moral representative of the popular mind—the last of the aristocratic." But this definition is unsatisfactory. Fashion executes its decree with as much energy and effect upon those who are excluded from its mystic circle, as upon them who reside within its pale; upon the popular mind as well as the aristocratic. Its frivolities bewilder and dazzle the multitude who abjure them, as well as the chosen few with whom they originate. Imagine this mysterious agent, or whatever it may be called, personified, and endowed with the majesty and power of a Queen,—and what are her attributes? A fickle, inconstant, inscrutable and unscrupulous being—selecting her subjects from every rank and condition, and with every diversity in morals and intellect—yet investing them with an uniform and exclusive badge of distinction; exacting from her followers the most unbounded homage, and repaying them often with the sacrifice of peace, health, fortune, self-respect and virtue; instilling into those who throng around her throne the poison of impure and corrupting pleasures, and in those who are banished to the outer courts, awakening the worst passions of envy, discontent and hatred, added to a debasing sense of inferiority. Fortune is more capricious in dispensing her favors than this, this empress of smiles and frowns. By her hand, the withered maiden of forty is arrayed in the matchless charms of blooming seventeen, and the notorious libertine becomes transmuted into a fascinating and agreeable companion. If a despot of bodily shape and form, were to cause his power and caprice to be felt in all the minute concerns and occupations of society; if he were to ordain laws regulating the dress, furniture, social intercourse and amusements of his subjects, and in so doing should levy an oppresive tax upon their fortunes, time and comforts; the spirit of freedom would circulate, like the electric fluid, from one end of the community to the other; the tyrant would be resisted with fearless and indomitable perseverance. And yet doth fashion issue her imperial decrees equally as despotic and calamitous in their effects, without other aid than the influence and magic of her name—whilst her subjects, so far from opposing resistance, render an implicit and delighted obedience to her mandates. And what is this inexorable arbitress at last but a name? What is this capricious and mysterious intermeddler in human affairs but a vain shadow? a creature of imagination only, and yet as powerful as Cæsar and Napoleon in their glory! Shakspeare was wrong; there is much — there is everything in names.

In that great concern of human society, the structure and action of the Political Machine, how does the matter stand? Are the governed portion of mankind, I mean the majority of them, influenced by things or names? The recorded experience of past ages, and our own particular observation, will answer the question. The master spirits who have ruled mankind with success, have studied the genius of the people with whom they lived. National glory was at one time, if it be not now, the passion of the French, and Napoleon well knew how to avail himself of a moral lever of such tremendous force. Administering to that all devouring and never satiated appetite, who found it an easy task to wade through tears and blood to the goal of his ambition.

Preceding the period of his meteor-like and almost super-human career, the French nation had been intoxicated by seraphic dreams of liberty and equality. Awakening from a long and gloomy night of slavery, they became suddenly bewitched by the doctrines of a new philosophy, (to them at least new,) which proclaimed the sovereignty of the people, it was long before the horror of the Revolution could dispel the enchantment. The leaders in that dark and bloody espisode of human history, retained their ascendancy so long as the names of liberty and equality could be skilfully employed for their purposes.

In the sequel, let us inquire whether we, in our day are free from these disastrous influences! Have names no magic with us sufficiently fatal to unloose the bands of society—to subvert institutions, long cherished and venerated, and finally to dissolve the fairest fabric, which ever realized the visions of hope, or the speculations of philosophy? Alas! have we not studied human nature enough to know, that all men are not honest and patriotic and that some are sufficiently selfish, cunning, and ambitious to work out their own designs, and accomplish their own evil desires, although calamity should overspread society, and millions go supperless to bed? Are there not hundreds of demagogues who are willing to blatter and wheedle and delude the people into final enslavement, if in the whirlwinds of their own creation, they can ride into power and office! To fulfill the purposes of ambition, the vilest appeals are made to the lowest and basest passions of the multitude; and thousands of men are promoted to offices of trust who have no brains in their craniums, and as little honesty in their hearts, but who happen to belong to some dominant political faction.

It would be perfectly amusing, if it were not at the same time a subject of sad contemplation, to hear the terms Whig and Democrat, in the party contests of the day—familiarly applied to things and persons having no one quality, to justify such idol distinctions. The man for example who is "clothed in purple and fine linen, and fares sumptuously every day," who "lies down in luxury and rises in sloth," that man is a leader of the plain republican party, whilst the humble, homespun pedestrian, who walks by the wheels of the other's chariot, whose bread is earned by the sweat of his brow, but who has independence enough to think for himself and go for the good of his Country without regarding politics, is denounced as an aristocrat, and what is still worse, as a federalist.

Epithets are the powerful weapons by which bad men have in all countries, finally succeeded in overturning all that was valuable and good; and unless the people of States shall in time, look more to qualities and less to names, we shall assurdly add another to that gloomy procession of republics, WHICH HAVE VANISHED FOREVER FROM THE EARTH.

FRIEND GUARDIAN:—At a complimentary Supper given by the people of Kanesvile, to the Delegate and Officers of Utah, at Mr. Hyde's New Hall, Tuesday evening, May 13th, 1851. The Delegate Hon. Almon W. Babbitt and Lady, the Agent John M. Bernhisel, Judge Snow and Lady, Secretary Harris and Lady, Mr. Day, and Mr. Rose, Indian Sub Agents, were present.

A goodly and interesting number of the fair ladies of Kanesville, and also of gentlemen, were present.

At an early hour a sumptuous repast was served up, the tables were loaded with the choicest viands the market affords. Much credit is due the managers and waiters, especially Messrs. Benson & Kelting, for the order and style of arrangements for the entertainment; notwithstanding the great hurry and press of business at the time, every thing was not only in ample but apple pie order.

As the sparkling wine came round the board, toasts were drank to the guests. The Delegate, Judge Snow and some others, made suitable remarks for the occasion, showing their gratitude and satisfaction, in the honor done. Among the many toasts and sentiments expressed on the occasion, the following are a part, and as the names of some of the Guests were so singularly associated. Much laughable punning and rhyming were the consequence.

The Guests.—
Long may the Day so fine and pleasant now,
Be fair as Snow upon the mountains Brow;
No storms to Harr-is nor rude winds to blow,
In yon fair Vale may Rose and Almon-d grow.
[Amicus.

The Ladies of Kanesville.—Especially those who surround this festive board; may they speedily be gathered to the sweet vallies of the mountains—to fair Utah and help to increase the population of the new Territory.—T. D. B.

Small Matters with Big Ends.

MR. EDITOR:—As I belong to the Church over which you have the honor to preside in this part of the land, and feeling anxious for the welfare of mankind, and knowing that for the benefit, prosperity and happiness of the human race, it is necessary for every one to conduct themselves in a way that will gain the confidence of all good men. I will therefore touch on some evils that might exist, calculated in their nature, to injure those that may indulge in them, particularly those that wish to be numbered with the great and happy, in time or in eternity. I will suppose that my neighbor is going to emigrate to the Valley of the mountains this season, and he has some property that I want, and am not prepared to pay for, but promise to send the pay to him next season, and I use the property, and when the time comes to send the pay I have not the money; though I have something that I could turn and pay the debt, but perhaps it is your stock that would double in value in the course of the year, and through selfishness I betray my trust, by not fulfilling the contract, and leaving my friend to sink or swim as he can; then have I not disgraced myself, sacrificed all confidence that my friend reposed in me, and contributed my mite to destroy public confidence.

Again, suppose that me and my neighbor are expecting to move to the Valley of the Salt Lake next season, and he (my neighbor,) has some article that I wish to have for my convenience in crossing the plains, but I have not the means to spare to pay for it, and my friend proposes to let me have it, and pay him when we get to the Valley; well, circumstances turn out that neither of us go the coming season, as we expected, and I sell the property, or change it into other property that I think will be to my advantage; as I am not going to cross the plains as I expected when I purchased it of my friend; and neither of us emigrate for years, neither do I make any proposition to pay my friend in such property as I got, or otherwise, for the property I had of him. Now under these circumstances does not this become a debt of honor; and will not my friend have just cause to think that I am taking undue advantage of circumstances to profit by his kindness, and thereby weaken confidence, and injure myself and community.

Or I will suppose that me and my friend are going to emigrate to a wilderness country, and he has property that I want and am not prepared to pay for it; neither do I know when I can, but he says to me take it and pay it when you can as well as not; I take it—am prospered beyond expectation—soon have plenty and a surplus, though never feel ready to pay this debt of honor; although I frequently sell my friend property and take pay for it, in this case will I not destroy the confidence that my friend had misplaced in me, and contribute to destroy public confidence.

And again it frequently occurs that people have matters of small deal, whereby one becomes indebted to the other in so small an amount that it becomes a debt of honor, because there is but little danger of being dunned or pushed for it, and many take that advantage (selfishly and ignorantly,) to let such debt slide, and their credit begins to slide with it, for there is more honor in paying a debt that we never expect to be forced to pay, than in paying a debt secured by bond and security; then we should (if we wish to be honorable,) be punctual in all things, particularly in small matters and obligations where we are honor bound instead of legally bound, for if we are legally bound we can be brought to the square of Justice legally; but as many count small debts and debts of honor small matters, they should remember the sayings of little Charles Chatterbox, that "Tall oaks from little acorns grow, and large streams from little fountains flow;" and act upon the principle of equity and Justice, which every man has in his breast except it has been erased by (selfishness,) the bane of society, that when prominently developed and well defined means ruin; for the little foxes will spoil the vines. Always rather lay others under obligations by acts of generosity, than prey on the generosity of others. What I say to one I say to all, without respect to profession; consider and observe these principles, and we will have a noble, honorable, and happy community, that the power of darkness cannot prevail against. So mote it be. EQUITUS.

FRIDAY, JUNE 13, 1851.

Warning.

As this is probably the last article that we may write previous to our departure for the City of the Great Salt Lake, the spirit by which we are actuated, leads us to give the Saints a little caution.

On Friday night, May 30th, we dreamed a singular dream. A manuscript book was presented to us, about the size of common letter paper. It contained about three quires. It was legibly written, and purported to be a translation from that portion of the sealed plates found by Joseph Smith, which he was forbidden to disturd. We read it, page by page, in the vision of the night. It contained nothing very exceptionable: Nay; much of it was excellent teaching: but it was also shown us that it was a cunning trick of Satan's Ministers to cause the Saints to let go the "Iron Rod," or true Priesthood of the Holy One. We spoke of it to several of our friends, and told them that we felt confident such a deception would soon be attempted from some quarter; and on Tuesday, June 3d, we delivered quite a lecture in our "Sanctum" in relation to it, and spoke warmly, and with some emphasis. We told the listeners that if such a thing did not soon make its appearance, they might say that no confidence could with safety, be placed in our Impressions. At about nine o'clock P. M., of the same day, our Mail matter was brought into the Office, when Lo! and Behold; a proclamation from Gladden Bishop, of Kirtland, Ohio, was laid upon our table, announcing that he had obtained the said records, and many more also: His proclamation breaths the same spirit that we noticed in the Manuscrpt Book that we saw and read in our sleep. It contains many good things,—sympathizes with the Saints—takes their part, &c. But says; you must follow me, (Gladden.) Now before we can do all that he requires of us as an Editor, &c. We must first see the fruits of his alliance with Queen Victoria, according to his previous declarations.

The Saints should watch and pray that they may not become the subjects of deception and imposture; and those who retain the spirit of the Lord, we are confident, never will. Pray also, that speedy Judgment from Heaven may come on all those who give false revelations to deceive and beguile. Attend to your own business and duties—to your prayers and blessings in their season—to your labors temporal and spiritual while it is called to-day—to your fastings before you are compelled—to your alms while you have something to bestow; and help no man to make a calf for you to worship while your Moses is gone to the mountains to see his Moses.

Friend Gladden has had too many false revelations in by-gone times to be successful in his clams to greatness now. The Saints know him too well and his sickening and foolish pretensions, to listen for a moment, to his vanity, wickedness, and folly. Gladden will not prosper. His revelations will not take with the Saints, neither will the consequences and curses be answered upon the head of any, but his own. Look at him, all who will; and behold an example! The Lord will make him a sign and a warning to all who may claim to have sacred things, and have them not, but do lie. When a man's abominations, falsehoods, deceptions and intrigues, stamp him with infamy, and render him a just outcast from the pale of all good society; and he attempt to re-instate himself by claiming great power and authority, by sympathizing with the Saints in their troubles, by declaring that he possesses many sacred and valuable things, will find himself sadly mistaken, and his words will recoil upon his own head. One strong evidence of the truth of Mormonism is, the great exertions that are made by men and devils, through every stratagem, craft, device and oppression to overthrow it: But it moves on, and will continue to do so until all its enemies are confounded and put to shame.

Now, therefore, in addition to the above, we feel it our duty, before leaving, to say one thing more. There are those who come to this place, both Male and Female, some who are Mormons and some who are not, who adulterers and adulteresses. They come for the purposes of practicing their licentiousness and abominations. Their conduct coming up the rivers, reflects no honor upon them. They come with their offerings to the Church, and they offer nought but their own disgrace and dishonor. Now therefore, witness ye heavens, and give ear Oh Earth! for the Lord God Almighty will lay his hand heavily and speedily upon all such. Their names shall rot, and their memory perish; and this shall be the lot and portion of any and all who harbor such characters knowingly. We make no distinction of name, sex or party, Jew or Gentile, it is all the same. They shall be cursed when they lie down and when they rise up—when they go out and when they come in. We may be censured by some who wish to do evil: but we are prepared for the consequences, let them be what they may. A late and revised edition of these characters has made its appearance! but it is read, and understood. No guilty person in this respect can get from under the consequences unless he or she run at least, one hundred miles away from any location of the Saints, and remain that distance away.

To the Saints who are established here, and who wish to do right; free yourselves from all such trash that floats on the swelling current of emigration, and lodges on the banks—by trees, and in eddies. Kick and roll it off again, and let it pass away, lest it produce an unhealthy state of things among you.

Saint Joseph Gazette.

It will be recollected by our readers that we called upon the Editor of the above Journal through the Guardian a short time ago, to give us the name of his informant about the "Agreement in Council" to keep secret the discovery of a dead body found near the Slough some two miles from this Town. The article published in the Gazette, in its tendency and bearing, was unqualifiedly false; and yet its Editor, it appears, has not the generosity, honor, or manhood to contradict it, neither to give us the name of his informant. The number that should have contained the contradiction of the article, was silent, with the exception of a ☞ drawn with the pen just before our address. We have never formed a personal acquaintance with that gentleman; but have been told that he stood high in society. It may be so. We do not wish to censure when censure is not due; and it is our wish to keep on friendly terms with our brethren of the press, when we can do it without too great a sacrifice. But from the refusal of the Editor to give us the name of his "Kanesville Informant," we are forced to the conclusion that he either manufactured the falsehood himself, or that he wishes to shield some particular friend who may be engaged in coining falsehoods and slander to grace the columns of his sheet. Be it so. Touching this affair, we have an unsullied conscience, and likewise have some little idea of what belongs to good and gentlemanly usage. The Gazette, we believe, has a liberal circulation, and is highly esteemed by many: but until he gives us the author of those falsehoods and slander about the discovery of the dead body, we have no further use for that Journal, being satisfied that its Editor is willing that his neighbor should welter under unmerited slander, and abusive insinuations.

From the Plains.

Our latest accounts from the Elk Horn River are rather more favorable than those contained in our last. Hon. A. W. Babbitt and company had left the place where they were surrounded by water on the Island, but met with some loss. Mr. Babbitt had the greater part of his paper damaged, by water getting into his wagon beds. Our readers will recollect that this is the paper he brought to Kanesville, to start in opposition to us, to vindicate his character; which he considered was in no small degree tarnished.

The last accounts received from Mr. B. and company say, that they were at, or near the Loupe Fork of the Platte, prosecuting their journey as well as they could. Upon the authority of an Oregon Emigrant, who returned to this place a few days since, we here say; that three emigrants were drowned at, or near the Elk Horn, while attempting to cross some sloughs, also one was struck dead by lightning, but the names of those drowned, and the latter, we have not yet learned.

The Church emigration from this place this season, has got along remarkably well, circumstances considered. We have not heard of any accidents or losses, sustained by any of them; upon the whole, we have every reason to believe that the adverse circumstances they have been placed in at first, will only render them more submissive, and more patient the rest of the journey.

Emigration.

We notice in some of our exchanges, statements respecting the Oregon emigration this season, which we consider our duty to qualify; because we are on the Frontier, and know the facts relative to this matter. Some of the papers have copiously diffused through their columns, that the Oregon emigration would be but small this year; but we can assure all such, that their statements are not altogether correct. We have had our eye on all these matters, knowing that the facts would be of interest to the public at a future period; therefore we now give them.

The Oregon emigration by this place has been considerable, and they have taken with them the elements of prosperity, and a sure passport to success; their deportment while passing through here, has been orderly and circumspect,—their appearance healthy and indicating the inculcation of frugal and industrious habits, while their manner seemed to be prepossessing and free; they had their families with them. Their wagons and teams were in excellent conditon for the plains, and their stock of cows, sheep, &c., looked remarkably well.

We are glad to see people like these, pioneering their way to a new country, for they are certain to make the Wilderness bud, and blossom as the rose, and the solitary place glad. They carry with them a good and savory influence, which cannot fail to benefit society there, and add considerable to Uncle Sam's revenue also; what is more cheering than to see a class of healthy and robust men, women and children, leaving the halls of refinement, luxury and ease, in exchange for a life of industry and improvement? we leave the public to answer. The very bone and sinew of society, and national prosperity, are dependant upon its agricultural and commercial resources, and enterprise; therefore, the tillers of the soil are at the foundation of national glory, and should be esteemed as the noblemen of the land; we wish them much success. "Westward the Star of Empire wends its way." The Eastern hemisphere is getting dark and cloudy, and the political atmosphere South is charged with explosive matter, and is felt by a goodly number of the citizens there; and under a consciousness of doing better West, they are leaving their friends and acquaintances,—the field of political warfare and strife, in pursuit of a more agreeable element, and peaceable homes, on the quiet shores of the Pacific. In consequence of the recent heavy rains, the smaller streams, sloughs and rivers, have been unusually high; and the progress of emigration considerably retarded thereby; but now, the weather is clear and cool, grass good—roads improving every day, and every prospect bids fair for emigrants to proceed on their journey without any further trouble or delay.

The Annual Conference of the Church at Salt Lake.

Our readers will find in our Columns, this issue, a skeleton of the minutes of the Annual Conference at Salt Lake.

The brevity of this document, is owing to one of the clerks having been sick, and not able to furnish a more full detail of the proceedings of that body.

The speeches made, or any other doctrinal matter advanced, will appear in the paper as soon as we receive the April number of the Deseret News.

Emigrants.

Nathan Davis and family, from Ohio, J. F. Pierce, from Illinois, and Frederick Kesler and family, from Missouri, arrived at this place en route across the plains.

An Editor's Commandments.

1. Thou shalt consider thyself on holy ground, when you enter the SANCTUM, and act in good faith and propriety as you ought to do, in all good society while you remain there; and not as if you had tumbled head foremost into a grog shop, or ten pin alley, caring but little for consequences.

2. Thou shalt trouble him as little as possible, especially if he is writing an article for the paper, or perusing his exchanges after the arrival of the Mail, for he labors hard for the good of his Country.

3. Thou shalt not read the Manuscripts that may lay on his table, for they are sacred to him, and ought not to be handled by you for they are the public's treasure, and not one man's property; therefore he that transgresses this commandment will not be guiltless.

4. Thou shalt not enter the Compositor's room nor trouble him; for it is his business to set up type, and superintend that department; and the talking part he leaves the paper to do; therefore you are not wanted there. It means you!

5. Thou shalt transact all business pertaining to the Office, in the editor's room; except the Bridal Cake, that you may dispose of to the Printer, for it is his portion, and HE (the Printer) will not hold thee guiltless if thou forgettest him.

6. Thou shalt neither touch, handle or read, the exchanges without permission, for they are sent to the Office for the editor's benefit; and be not over anxious to obtain the news prior to the regular issue, lest he send thee empty away, and thou be esteemed a Literary Pauper.

7. Thou shalt pay him for his paper,—if in business advertise all the time, and encourage all you can, for he laboreth hard day and night, to keep the lamp of Intelligence trimmed and burning.

8. Thou shalt not speak evil of him, for he is the servant of the people for good—the Guardian of his Country, and the Citadel of Freedom.

9. Thou shalt not trouble him on Sunday, for he is a Christian, and loves to cherish and enforce christian virtues;—he hates to be disturbed on that day.

10. Thou shalt keep all these commandments and do them, and every other good one, that may come under your notice; for in so doing your light shall break forth as morning, and the brightness of your intelligence and prosperity as noonday;—your neighbors shall love and respect you, and all good people applaud you, but beware of loafers; they are drones in the hive of industry and improvement. Turn them out!

11. Thou shalt mind thine own business, and WE will Ours.

Salt Lake Mail.

The above mail via Independence Mo., came to this place on Monday evening the 3d inst. A goodly number of letters came with it; the greater part of which is for citizens residing in this County. Those of our friends who have been expecting letters from their friends in the Valley, would do well to call at the Post Office, (not this Office,) and get them. Some have a mistaken idea where the Post Office is kept, and by whom; we have been frequently harassed with people calling at this Office for letters, believing, that we attended to that business, therefore let this notice suffice forever upon this subject, that we do not. The Post Office is kept by Mr. Thomas Burdick, at the west end of Main Street, on the left hand side as you go to Council Point, and any letters to be mailed for the Valley, or elsewhere if dropped in there, will be carefully attended to, and forwarded to their proper places of destination.

Setting Type in G. S. L. City.

Doctor Willard Richards, Editor of the Deseret News, says in one of his leaders, that it costs him one dollar and twenty cents a thousand to get type set in that remote region. We can easily account for this high tariff imposed by Mr. Typo; perhaps his bread and lodging amounts in proportion to his liberal income.

To our Agents, and Others in this County.

As the emigration from this County will soon be over for this season, we deem it advisable that the vacancies occasion by those who may have left for the Valley be filled immediately. Therefore let each Township, or Branch of the Church, call a meeting, and elect by the vote of said meeting, a good man to receive and distribute the Guardian in their location; unless the last Agent resigned in favor of some good man, in such cases no meeting should be called, but he should be looked to as the acting Agent, and distributor of the paper. Let all the agents who are thus elected, send their names, and their places of residence to this Office, the first opportunity, so that we may give them their proper places in the columns of the paper, and erase the names of those who have removed.

Wanted Immediately

A few hundred bushels of corn wanted for the Guardian, and also upon debts due this Office, if delivered soon.

Those who know themselves indebted to the Office, are requested to adjust the same with as little delay as consistent. If this is not attended to, the delinquent may rest assured of one thing;—We will not sue him if he never pays us. So now bring us your corn and money, and pay up the old score without further cost.

Appointments in G. S. L. City.

The 11th of January number, of the Deseret News says:

On Thursday a petition was received by the General Assembly, numerously signed by the citizens of the City, praying for the adoption of the accompanying Bill, into "an ordinance to incorporate Great Salt Lake City," which passed on the third reading, and the City is now incorporated.

The following officers have been appointed according to ordinance:

MAYOR,—Jedediah M. Grant.

ALDERMEN,—Nathaniel H. Felt, William Snow, Jesse P. Harman and Nathaniel V. Jones.

COUNCILLORS,—Vincent Shirtleff, Benjamin L. Clapp, Zera Pulsipher, Wm. G. Perkins, Lewis Robinson, Harrison Burgess, Petter Clinton, John L. Dunyon and Samuel Richards.

We are personally acquainted with most of the above named gentlemen,—more especially with Mr. Grant and Mr. Felt, and know them to be high-minded and honorable men,—we think they cannot fail to prove faithful stewards to the citizens of Great Salt Lake City. Elder Felt presided over a Branch of the Church in St. Louis sometime since: He left last season for the Valley, in company with many of his friends; now, he is Alderman in G. S. L. City. Success to him, he has seen many days of trouble, perplexity and care, but after that, cometh the reward.

Gospel and Law.

The following from the Deseret News, reflects a great deal of credit on the magistrate; wonder, if a similar course would not have equally as good effect on the Saints in Pottawatamie County; we think it would not hurt any body to try. Magistrates and people, would do well to read the article, and if they like it, they may practice it also.

We find no fault with the Law, neither its being faithfully executed to the letter upon transgressors; but if you can do without it, and be at peace with one another, the Gospel is decidedly preferable; because it whispers throughout all its mandates the voice of peace and reconciliation.

Going to Law.

We are credibly informed that a recently appointed magistrate, in one of our northern counties was applied to by a brother, to issue process for the commencement of a suit at law, against a brother. The magistrate inquired of the applicant if he had a letter from his Bishop stating the fact that he had taken the Gospel steps towards his brother, in relation to the case in question, and that the brother had refused all satisfaction; and consequently, had been severed from the Church? The applicant said he had taken no such course, and had no such letter. Then, said the magistrate, I can issue no such process in your behalf: go and deal with your brother as a brother, according to the Gospel, and if refuses satisfaction, and the Bishop shall certify to me that he is no longer a brother, it will be time enough for me to let loose the law upon him. A truly commendable decision, and worthy of all acceptance and action, by all magistrates in Deseret; for a professed Saint, who cannot be governed by the Law of the Gospel, is not fit to be called a Saint, and the sooner he is out of the fellowship of Saints the better; then the Law, which is made for the lawless and disobedient, has claim on him as its own, and can lawfully enforce obedience to its requirements.

Godey's Lady's Book.

We have just received the June number of this most excellent and truly interesting periodical. It is edited by Mrs. Sarah J. Hale and L. A. Godey, Philadelphia, Penn., at the low rate of three dollars per annum, in advance.

The engravings are chaste and appropriate,—the poetical part sublime and harmonious; while the entire work presents an appearance, seldom equaled by any writer of the present age. This magazine should be in the hands of every fair one who feels anxious to attain the heights of fashion and refinement.

Perpetual Fund.

The agents have still a few yoke of cattle on hand, and those who are expecting to be helped by this institution, must make application forthwith at this office. We can wait no longer. Hereafter, first come, first served if worthy to be served at all.

The Last Company.

We are frequently asked when the last Company will leave for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. It would almost appear that some men consider it a virtue to hang on, and linger here until the very last moment. Now then, we tell it plainly; those who are not ready to leave during the coming week, cannot leave with our faith: and any wagon that crosses the River after the 20th inst., crosses at their own risk and upon their own responsibility. Our faith and counsel for emigrants to leave, extend to no period beyond the 20th inst. Such as have not crossed over the River by that time, better not cross at all this year.

Emigrants should keep a strong guard on the Plains against Indian depredations. We hear they are very bad.

Arrival of the Africa.

NEW YORK, May 21.

The Cunard steamer Africa arrived at her dock at 9 o'clock this morning. She sailed from Liverpool on the 10th at 4 P. M. Her dates are three days later from London and the Continent, and four days later from Liverpool.

England.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Gazley has brought forward his motion for the repeal of malt act; he said the effect of the act was to increase the price of Beer to poor men, who had to pay five hundred per cent. upon Beer, and it had the effect of diminishing the consumption. The House divided, when the vote for the motion stood 122, against it 288; majority against the motion 136.

Mr. Hughes moved for a select committee to enquire whether the mode of assessing and levying the income tax, might not be made equitable. A discussion then took place, and the motion was agreed to.

France.

The statement made by Lacuse, on the authority of Mr. Gerardin, of a plan for revolutionizing England and France, has created some excitement. It is stated that in March 28, 1848, Gen. Changannier proposed to Ledru Rollin, then minister of the Interior, that if 10,000 men were granted him, he would land in England and proclaim a Republic. Gerardin persists in his assertion and says, that the General sent a written proposition to Ledru Rollin to that effect. Gerardin positively says that he has the same in his possession; the charge has not been yet denied. Petitions in favor of an alteration of the Constitution, and a prolongation of the President's powers are becoming general.

Portugal.

The Duke of Soldana has been named President of the Council of Ministers of the Queen.

Spain.

We learn from Madrid that the government on the 1st inst., despatched a courier to Lisbon with new instructions to the Spanish Minister, in relation to the Soldana insurrection.

One of the Madrid papers announces that the Count Thomas has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to the Austrian Government.

Italy.

Great agitation prevails in the Roman States, and throughout the whole of Italy. The Government is expected to be removed to Genoa.

The Marquis de Agelo, President of the Council left Turin for Genoa, to calm the Democrats, if possible. Piedmont and England are against the commercial league of the Italian States.

To Our Readers.

We received by the last Mail from Salt Lake, several numbers of the Deseret News, that contain several useful and instructive speeches, delivered by President Young and others, on particular occasions. For want of room they are crowded out of this number; but will appear in future in our columns from time to time, as we have opportunity.

THE NEW POSTAGE STAMPS.—The Postmaster General has accepted Messrs. Toppan, Carpenter, Casalier & Co., of Philadelphia, as contractors for all the new postage stamps under the law which will go into effect on the 1st July next. Those for the twelve-cent are similar to the ten-cent stamps, with the full face of Washington thereon. The three-cent stamp represents the bust of Washington in profile, as it would appear upon a medal. The one-cent stamp is a finely executed bust of Franklin, in profile. These will be found very convenient to pay the postage on newspapers, or to make small change. Probably fifty millions of stamps will be required within a year.

A Rich Item.

The Ladies will please read the following from the Deseret News.

We have heard suggested the propriety of having a Ladies Lyceum instituted for the diffusion of knowledge in domestic economy, and we highly approve the suggestion. If there is a Lady in Deseret, who knowns no better than to immerse, or pour water on genteel table knives, handled with wood of any kind, or horn, that Lady ought to attend such Lyceum.

A widow lady gave an ex-editor a sound thrashing in Broadway, New York, in the presence of thousands of spectators.

THOMAS BULLOCK, Clerk.

DAYTON, FREMONT CO., IOWA, May 31st, 1851.

ELDER HYDE:—At the present time the attention of many persons are directed to the West, as a fare home for themselves and families, anxious to be of service to all such, and to diseminate information generally.

I hope you will give the following a place in your widely circulating paper.

Fremont County is the south west County in Iowa, upon the Missouri River, fifty miles below the Council Bluffs, about twenty-four miles square, bounded on the South by the State of Missouri, West by the Missouri River, with the Nichnabotna, a small river passing through from the north east to the South part of the County, affording abundance of water-power; either upon the main streams or its tributaries. The whole Country abounding with the finest springs, very well proportioned with timber and prairie, except a small portion upon the eastern border, where the prairie predominates. As a grazing country it cannot be surpassed in the same latitude; combining equal if not superior agricultural, commercial and mechanical advantages. In fertility of soil, or beauty of scenery can be nowhere surpased; increasing in population with a rapidity know to few other places. Labor of every kind well rewarded, especially mechanics; the demand greatly overrunning the supply. About three years since the County was organized with a population of about four hundred, which has since risen to fifteen hundred or two thousand.

The seat of Justice has recently been located at this place upon the main thoroughfare to Kanesville, at the centre of the County, twelve miles east of old Fort Kearney, Nebraska Territory, upon the dividing ridge between the Missouri and Nichnabotna rivers, in a beautiful Barau adjacent to timber, and supplied with excellent spring water.

The first sale of lots will take place the 30th of June next, the proceeds to be applied to the erection of public buildings.

Persons seeking locations as farmers, mechanics or merchants, will do well to examine this section of country before they purchase elsewhere. AN EMIGRANT.

Progress of Mormonism.

We were favored yesterday with the perusal of a letter dated London, April—, from Mr. John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Mormon faith, now on a mission to France from the Salt Lake, The letter is one of enquiry, and is one of great interest to the public, as exhibiting the energy and enterprise of our Mormon fellow-citizens, and foreshadows in no small degree, the important position which the people of the Salt Lake valley, will, at some not distant day, hold on this continent.

Mr. Taylor states that two large establishments are fitting out in London for the Salt Lake valley. One comes out for the purpose of manufacturing broad and other cloths, vestings, merinoes, alpacas, and other fabric, of that description, together with shawls, blankets, flannels, &c. The other establishment spoken of, comes out for the purpose of manufacturing sugar from the beet root, on the same principle as in France. These will require a great deal of machinery, which it is contemplated to bring out together with men to work it, the object being to manufacture every thing required in the valley, so as not to be necessitated to purchase it elsewhere.

Mr. Taylor after a short detail of this, enters upon enquiries as to the prices of sheet iron and copper in St. Louis, Pittsburg and Cincinnati markets, and mentions very particularly the want of a steam boiler made out of one-half inch iron, thirty feet in length by four feet in diameter, of which he asks the probable price. He signifies it to be the intention of the party emigrating to take out sheep to the valley, of a superior breed, and enquires if it would be likely to procure here, from one thousand to two thousand merino, or south-downs, and one hundred and fifty yoke of cattle of good stock. To all these questions it was Mr. Taylor's wish to obtain an early answer, and as there may be persons in our city who may be interested in the sale of such, we would advise prompt communication with Elder Wrigley, at 206 Market street.—[Organ and Reveille, May 20th, 1851.

Opening of the Crystal Palace.

The Liverpool Journal gives the following account of the Exhibition:

The great Exhibition in the Crystal Palace in Hyde Park, was opened with much ceremony, by the Queen in State. Thirty thousand persons were present, and notwithstanding the immense multitude, the ceremonies went off without accident or mishap. Up to the previos evening the Crystal Palace was a scene of busy life, but the immense mass of contributions was finally arranged, the rubbish wholly cleared away, and the building presented a most magnificent appearance.

The doors were opened at an early hour. The multitude of exhibitors and ticket holders began to pour in, and quietly and without confusion took the place assigned to them. By half past eleven o'clock the multitude was admitted, and then the doors were closed to visitors until after the visit of the Queen.

The Royal commissioners assembled then in front of the platform in the transept, which had been erected for the Queen. At twelve o'clock a flourish of trumpets announced the approach of Her Majesty, who entered by the north entrance, attended by the Royal family, the Prince of Prussia, and other guests from foreign courts. As she entered, an immense choir, occupying the north gallery of the transept, sang God save the Queen, in which many of the spectators joined. Sir George Smart superintended this part of the musical services.

The formal ceremonies and delivery of speeches, took place as announced, and a prayer was then pronounced by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Hallelujah chorus of Handel's Messiah was then performed, under the direction of Sir Henry Bishop.

The Royal procession then moved round the building, Mr. Paxton, the architect, taking the lead. As the Queen passed, the multitude rose and received her with cheers. The eight organs in the building successively struck up with fine music as her Majesty passed them. After returning to the platform, the Queen announced the exhibition opened, which was communicated to the public by a flourish of trumpets and a National salute from guns at such a distance as not to endanger the glass house. The Queen and suite then departed, and the doors were again opened.

Outside the Crystal Palace the crowd was immense and the lines of carriages unprecedented. They were kept in good order by the police.

For the Frontier Guardian.

THE SISTER'S LAMENT.

Why leave us now, my brother dear,
And journey far away?
O why, in grief, should sorrow's tear
Flow down the long, long day?

Wilt thou not miss thy mother's care,—
Thy father's friendly hand?
Must strangers thy sweet counsel share,
In that lone, distant land?

Shall we ne'er sit and hear thy voice,
Nor see thy face again?
How can you, to depart, rejoice,
And brave the swelling main?

O, hear the whirlwinds, how they blow!
Wild roar the surges, too!
O brother, brother, do not go;
O, heed my voice, will you?

Already, years thou hast been lost
To thine own kindred dear;
And will you now again be tossed,
With none thine heart to cheer?

O, we will cherish thee still more
Than e'er we yet have done;
We'll comfort thee each lonely hour,
If thou'lt remain at home.

Then leave us not, our brother dear,
To journey far away;
O why should sorrow's bitter tear
Flow down the long, long day?

MARIA.

BROTHER'S REPLY.

Sister, dear sister, do not mourn,
That I must hence remove;
For, sure, again I'll soon return,
To greet the ones I love.

Why should thy tears in sorrow flow,
When we are going to part?
Know'st thou not why these things are so?
Then, oh! why grieve thine heart?

Could I say No, when God commands,
"Come out of her, my son!"
Methinks, dear sister, kindred bands
Should not be mentioned then.

Do not I love my friends, my home?
Ah yes!—thou know'st I do;
And would I wildly from them roam,
For wealth, and honors, too?

God knows my heart—I would not go,
O'er hills and plains to stray,
For all the gems of oceans,—no,
For all of California.

But when God speaks, shall I not hear,
And answer, "Here I am?"
Yea, though all earth and hell appear
Against me, lo, I come.

I'm ready, Lord, to offer up
Whate'er I have on earth;—
Yea, by thy grace, to drink the cup,—
If thou decree,—of death.

Why should I count my life so dear,
When thou hast died for me?
Shall I the King of Terrors fear,
Who, soon, o'ercome shall be?

O, dearest sister, did you know
The joys that those await,
Who're willing to be treated, now,
With scorn, for Jesus' sake,—

Thou wouldst not think my lot so hard,
Nor grieve so much for me;
For God, the Lord's right hand will guard,
His staff my comfort be.

MISCELLANY.

A Few Words About House-Keeping.

ADDRESS TO LITTLE GIRLS.

The other day, not having anything in particular to do, I went, without ceremony, to dine at the house of Mrs. B. an intimate friend of mine, and who I knew was always prepared for company.

I found that Mrs. B. had gone into the country to pass the day, but her daughter Ann, a little girl of eleven years, told me that she was left in charge of the house, and begged me to stay and dine with her. I said that I feared so young a house-keeper might be incommoded by having an unexpected guest. But Ann assured me that she had often been thus left, and that she already had for a guest an aunt who had arrived that morning, to spend some weeks with my friend. I therefore resolved to stay, and judge of my little hostess's abilities as a house-keeper.

I attended closly to Anna's mode of proceeding, and was charmed to see with what grace, what activity and intelligence this little girl took her mother's place. She saw to everything without appearing to be fluttered or anxious; told her wishes to the domestics with a manner at once so kind and so dignified, that young as she was, they seemed to take pleasure in obeying her.

The dinner was in excellent order, and as far as I could judge, every thing went on as well as if the mistress of the house had been at home. I went away charmed at this sight, which gave rise, in my mind, to the reflections which I wish to suggest to those of my readers who, from their sex and age, are liable to be called upon, as Anna was, to superintend the household, and perhaps entertain unexpected guests.

This art of conducting the household and keeping all things in order, which belongs particularly to woman, and which should be learned young, is what is meant by the phrase domestic economy. It has for its end to procure the greatest amount of comfort at the least expense of money and labor. To attain this, three qualities are requisite above all others; namely, industry, order, and regularity. It is also necessary to be acquainted with a thousand little details, which experience will teach better than all the books in the world. I know no more interesting sight than a young girl following the example of her mother, helping her, and working with her for the prosperity of the house, and by early accustoming herself to the cares of a family, preparing to become, in her turn, a useful woman and a good mother. These honorable occupations should form part of a good education, and a taste for them shows a sensible mind, and an estimable character.

There was once a time when even queens and empresses occupied themselves with spinning and weaving; and Homer, the greatest poet of antiquity, who has in verse portrayed the mannners of ancient Greece, speaks of princesses as taking care of their own clothes.

Among the countries of Europe, Germany, may be selected as offering, in its domestic manners, the most good examples; for, even in the highest families, the females are expected to be good house-keepers, and careful overseers, however rich they may be and however many domestics they may be able to keep.

In our own country, I have been sorry to see that an absurd idea has been very common, that those who are able to hire work done, are for that reason not to be expected to know anything about household labor, or to take any share in it. This theory is not only very absurd but mischievous; for when the mistress of a family does not think it necessary to at least oversee every thing that is done in the household will be sure to want the air of comfort and cheerfulness which is so important a part of domestic life In short, this house-keeping is a high accomplishment, and, like all other accomplishments, is much more easily learned in youth than at a later age

There is nobody who does not love to see a young girl intelligent and industrious, attentive to all that is important for her to learn, and yet with the modesty that is proper to her years. When I see such an one, I say to myself:

Here is a young girl who will some day or other become an excellent woman, who will be a good mother, and educate her children to be like herself, who will make her household a happy one, and, without depriving herself of any thing necessary, will be able by her good management to carry comfort and happiness to those who are suffering.

Is not this last thought, my children, a happy one, is it not what you all would wish to do! I hope so; for to do good shows a benevolent mind, and a heart grateful to the Creator for the benefits he unceasingly bestows upon us.

Think of all this, little girls, and remember that no one is too young to learn and to be useful; and that dusting the parlor, and setting up the chairs, is one branch, though a humble one, of the great art of

A HOUSE-KEEPER.

Fallacies of the Ladies.

By a gentleman who unfortunately knows them only too well.

That they are our equals.

That dinner can be delayed, and that our watches are always wrong.

That we can wait with the patience of Job whilst they are putting on their bonnets. (Job's wife never had a bonnet.)

That we can always own a new hat.

That they can do everything so much better than we can—from doctoring the baby up to making a speech.

That they are angels, (pretty angels they are, indeed.)

That nothing is ever dear, provided their minds are made up on having it.

That we can't tell their age, and when they refuse to tell that, we imagine them younger than they really are.

That their relations are the best people in the world, and that we are delighted with having two or three of them in the house the year round.

That being caressed for half an hour, and then asked for money, is agreeable.

That it is necessary for them to practice music only whilst we are in the house.

That it is necessary for us to suffocate under a tight cravat, or conceal ourselves behind a shirt collar, because it is the fashion.

That every Sunday morning we can find all our shirts without buttons, and not swear a little.

That when we are low-spirited and taciturn, a fit of hysterics on their part will produce an agreeable reaction on ours.

That we have not the most remote idea what sum will meet necessary household expenditures, and, because we never make a fuss about trifles, that we are blind.

That we take a lively interest in our neighbors' affairs, and we are enlivened and edified upon a recital of their follies.

That we must "take the goods the gods provide us, and never express aught but a favourable opinion of the dishes set before us.

That it is necessary the furniture should be renewed, because Mrs. Such-a-one has just bought "such a love of a sofa," &c., &c.

That we are assured of their industry, provided they beat the carpets, sweep the rooms, dust the furniture, &c., &c., whilst we are unavoidably detained in the house.

That we feel gratified upon being assured, some half dozen times per day, that they refused at least ten offers of marriage before excepting us.

In short that we can't do without them.

Fluency in Conversation.

Roll an empty barrel down hill, and what a rattling noise it makes! So with an empty carriage over the pavements. So also with an empty head. When it contains but a few scattering ideas, every body can hear them rattle. You can almost see them, when the fellow who carries such a head passes by you. Have you not such an individual in your mind's eye? We have. His name may be Dick or Jim, Bill or Joe—but he is the same everywhere—he wags the same tongue, shoots forth the same ideas. He thinks he is wise, but everybody else thinks otherwise. Had he real knowledge, he would talk less, and say more. Generally a man of sterling talents talks but very little, yet every word tells. Addison was a person of this description. He was always embarrassed in company. Some of our best living authors—men of genius and talent—have been noticed for their paucity of words in common conversation. Yet men who know scarcely more than twice two make four, are always rattling off words, and pass for persons of some consequence. They utter sentences without meaning, and words that would puzzle an editor to understand.

An incessant talker we always avoid. In his presence we feel about as happy as on the brow of a cataract—only there is some sense to the latter. In an office or store, what is more trying than a person with the gift of gab?—what but a straggling musician under your window, or a fiddler in your garret?

Farmers.

Adam was a farmer while yet in Paradise. and after his fall was commanded to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Job, the honest, upright and patient, was a farmer, and his stern endurance has passed into a proverb.

Socrates was a farmer, and wedded to his calling the glory of his philosophy. St. Luke was a farmer, and divided with Prometheus the honor of subjecting the ox to the use of man.

Cincinnatus was a farmer, and the noblest Roman of them all. Burns was a farmer, and the muse found him at his plough, and filled his soul with poetry.

Wasington was a farmer, and retired from the highest earthly station to enjoy the quiet of rural life, and present to the world its spectacles of human greatness.

To these names may be added a host of others who sought peace and repose in the cultivation of their mother earth; the enthusiastic Lafayete, the steadfast Pickering, the scholastic Jefferson, the fiery Randolph, all found an El Dorada of consolation from life's cares and troubles in the green fields and verdant lawns that surrounded their homesteads.—[Lyons Address

The way to Wealth.

If you would increase the size and promin ence of your eyes—just keep an account of all the money you spend foolishly, and add it up every quarter.

If you wish to get rich get married—When was honey made with one bee in the hive? —[Louiza County Times.

Good breeding is a guard upon the tongue: the misfortune is that we put it on and off with our fine clothes and visiting faces, and do not wear it where it is most wanted—at home.

Thinking by Machinery.

Alfred Smee announces a new piece of mechanism, by which he can show the relation of any number of facts or principles, inductively and deductively, and thus perform, mechanically, what has hitherto been thought to be the province of the mind.

"Charles," said a father to his son, while they were working at a sawmill, what possesses you to associate with such girls as you do! When I was of your age, I could go with the "first cut." "The first cut," said the son, as he assisted the old man in roiling over a log, "is always a slab."

You rarely if ever see a politician with smooth hair—a great scholar with fine hair—an artist with red hair—a fop with coarse hair—a minister with long hair, or an editor whose hair is carefully adjusted.

The Legislature of California has passed a law which affixes the penalty of death, in the discrimination of the jury, to the offence of grand larceny, which there consists in stealing property worth more than fifty dollars.

Answer to A. H. B's. Rebus.

Impromptu.

Your first a changless element
Of letters four, spells FIRE,
And MAN, the miniature dim,
'Twixt Brute and HIM, far higher.
Your whole, a Fireman I behold,
To fire an open foe.
Since now, your Rebus I have told,
Please solve the one below. AMICUS.

Rebus.

BY AMICUS.

Eight letters does my whole contain,
And three my first will spell,
A boundless, wide, sublime do-main;
The veriest child may tell.
It boasts the grandest works of art,
The mightiest earthly power;
To man it wealth, and woe imparts,
Each anxious passing hour.
My second is a living thing,
A creature useful, strong;
And sometimes wealth and honor brings,
To whom it doth belong.
My whole's a monster that is rarely seen.
My 6 5 7 2, the choicest flower amid the green;
My 1 5 6 8, is painful, tiresome, filthy, mean,
My 3 1 7, an ill-famed brute, indeed, I ween,
My 7 2 8 6, as good a man as e'er has been;
My 4 5 1 8, a garment made without a seam,
My 4 5 2, a tool oft used at morn's first gleam,
My 7 4 5 6 2, a place of wind, of wet and steam,
My 2 3 6, a member useful, truthful, lean.
[An answer requested.

You will be Wanted.

Take courage young man. What if you are but an humble and obscure a poor, neglected orphan—a scoff and a by word to the thoughtless and gay, who despise virtue in rags because of its tatters.—Have you an intelligent mind, all untutored though it be? Have you a virtuous aim, a pure desire and honest heart? Depend upon it, one of these days you will be wanted!

The time may be long deferred. You may grow to manhood, and you may even reach your prime, ere the call is made, but virtuous aims, pure desires and honest hearts are too few and sacred not to be wanted.

Your virtues shall not always be hidden—your poverty shall not always wrap you about as with a mantle—obscurity shall not always veil you from the multitude. Be chivalric in your combat with circumstances. Be ever active, however small your sphere of action. It will surely enlarge with every movement, and your influence will have constant increasment.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb driven cattle—
Be a hero in the strife.

Work on for surely you will be wanted, and then comes your reward. Lean upon the sacred verity. "I have never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Never despair, for the lives of good men abundantly show that often when clouds are blackest, and the tempest is fiercest, and hope is faintest, a "still and small voice" will be heard saying, "come hither—you are wanted," and all your powers will find employment. Therefore take heart, young man, for ere long, "you will be wanted."

Letter From John Taylor.

PARIS, March 13th, 1851.

PRESIDENT HYDE:

DEAR SIR:—I presume that before this time you would be expecting a letter from me, but as I desired to have something to say before I wrote, I have deferred until the present.

Br. Pack, Br. Bolton and myself, went to Boulogne-sur-mer, for the purpose of commencing our mission (on 10th June,) as there were a number of English there we thought we perhaps might baptize some who would be useful in assisting to preach in French, and thus introduce the Gospel elsewhere. We took a Hall, and I delivered a course of lectures in English. Br. Bolton did not feel himself competent to preach in French without a little more experience. I published the outlines of our faith, and the object of our coming, in a French and English paper in both languages. Some English Priests challenged me to a discussion which I accepted, I published it in English which you will see; I also sent copies of the paper with my first announcement to you which I hope you received. Soon after I went to Paris, in company with Br. Bolton and Br. William Howell, from Wales; Br. Pack stayed in Boulogne for a time, and has gone to Calais, where he is preaching to an English congregation. He has baptized a few in Calais. In Paris we have raised a small Church. I have baptized a few men, three of whom have been educated in the college in Paris, one of them is now preaching some distance from Paris; he has baptized a number, and hundreds are flocking to hear him from miles around. I sent another Elder of more experience, to keep an eye over things for fear of excitement which would be very injurious here. I have published a pamphlet in French, and now have other things prepared for the Press which will be immediately published. I purpose to publish a paper to be issued monthly. I shall forward them to you and shall be happy to exchange with the "Frontier Guardian," if there was a hope of my receiving any, but unfortunately I have never as yet received one paper from your office; there must be strange delinquency in your Post Office, for I find it is the case with Br. Richards; I purpose calling it L'ETOILE DE L'OCCIDENT. (The Star of the West.)

Br. Bolton has translated the Book of Mormon, but it needs a revision. He is not sufficiently acquainted with the French to prepare it for the Press. However we have brethren that are as competent as any in France. The revision is now going on with one of our brethren; we read over together Br. Bolton's translation. Our Translator regulates the Grammar, and I the Doctrinal Points, and and among us all we shall I believe have a good translation, at any rate, we shall do our best for it. I purpose having it Stereotyped, and the copyright secured if possible in the name of the President of the Church.

I purposed returning home this season, but on the receipt of the Epistle of the Presidency, I perceived it was their desire that the brethren on the continent should remain another year; so I have made my arrangements accordingly; since I have done so, I feel persuaded that the spirit has directed them aright in this thing, and feel as I always have done a desire to follow the directions of those whom God has appointed as my leaders.

As the Presidency have expressed a desire for us to visit other nations, I purpose as soon as I can arrange matters in Paris; to go to Germany, and try to establish the Gospel in that nation. I expect also to be able to publish the Book of Mormon in that language. Br. Hyde, I feel as though the Lord was with me, my heart rejoices in God my Savior. All is well! and I think the Br's Snows and myself will kindle a fire on the continents that will never be extinguished. I should have been very happy to have given you an account of the position of the other brethren, the news is very cheering, but as you will receive letters it is unnecessary. Suffice it to say that Br. Erastus Snow is doing a good work in Denmark, Br. Lorenzo Snow has also commenced baptizing both in Italy and Switzerland. It is as you stated when we were with you in Kanesville, no easy task to establish the Gospel in a foreign land, amongst a people whose language you do not understand, and whose prejudices, customs, laws and religion are so dissimilar to ours. There is a very material difference between reading a language and speaking it, and some of our professedly learned men cut but a sorry figure when they come to test their education by practise. Br. Bolton has been of great service to me in this, as he speaks the language. Don't laugh when I tell you I have preached a number of times to French congregations in Paris, in their own language or partly so, for I can assure you that mine is very bungling French, but I expect I should pass for a learned man in England or the United States, all I profess there in language is my ignorance. As I stated above, the prejudices of the people are different. Catholicism presents another phase entirely to Protestantism, and I believe that there is as little or less hypocrisy in them than the Protestants. Talk about the ministration of an Angel, and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, they do not express unbelief. They are often astonished,—tell you it is very remarkable, and wish to know particulars. They generally think there ought to be Revelations. The question with them generally would be; is this Revelation true? Have I time to attend to it? They do not, like the Protestants, disbelieve the Bible when opened, nor cavil at it. If they are not Infidel (which a very great many are,) and you read a passage of scripture to them they do not oppose it. The Priests prohibit them the Bible, but when you show it to them they have faith in it.

Protestantism is here at a very low ebb, it is too flimsy and shallow, and never can become popular here. Many of the Catholic Priests are disgusted with their own religion; but cannot receive Protestantism. I believe ere long many of them will join our Church. I have been since my arrival here more anxious to establish a correct foundation, than to increase the numbers. When the work once starts properly, it will run like fire. In my writings I declare that we are neither Catholic nor Protestant, either in authority, calling or doctrine. I leave every party alone and preach the Gospel to all. The most that have yet joined are Catholics.

The Political state of affairs here are very precarious. The ministry have lately been dissolved by the President, whose power and influence is very much on the wane, the Chamber of Deputies are in opposition to him; insomuch that he could not obtain ministry from the Representatives of the people, and had to pick them up as he could. A great deal of dissatisfaction prevails, and I should not be surprised any day to hear of another revolution. The people are governed too much. The nation is called Republican, but there is not one-tenth the Liberty in France that there is in England. Things are much worse now than they were in Louis Phillippi's dynasty. Liberty of Speech and the Press is almost entirely proscribed, and the people are kept down by force of arms. In Paris and its Environs, there are upwards of one hundred thousand soldiers; besides, Gens-d'armes,—other Police and National Guard. It is unlawful to circulates Pamphlets without obtaining license as a "Colporteur." However we work with the laws as well as we can, for if they will do for the people they will do for us. The people are generally disgusted with their laws and government, and Trade and Commerce are consequently materially affected. I conversed a few days ago with a gentleman who had been connected with two large Iron works who had withdrawn for fear of change, commotion, and consequently loss. The position of our government has a very powerful influence here among many. They admire our perseverance, organization and liberty; and I have contrived to get many pieces of importance into some of the leading papers. I had the last Epistle of the Presidency published in the "Journal des Debats," the leading paper; and the chief Editor made some very gentlemanly remarks, and signed his name to them. I sent him my compliments, and "remercied" me, and offered to publish anything of interest again. I expect it will be published also in "Galignani's Messenger," as I had a letter of introduction from a French Consul to him,—he offered to render me any favor in his way. Through the politeness of Dr. Bernhisel, I have received some very good letters that are of use to me here. But that of Governor Young is just as good as any I have. When in Boulogne, I shewed it to the Mayor, who told me it was all that was required, and treated me with very great courtesy during my stay. I purpose calling on the Minister of the Interior, in Paris, to obtain permission to preach in France. If this permission can be obtained, it will be of great benefit to the Elders, as anything issuing from Paris is considered of great importance by the officers of the various Departments. But at the present time, until things shall be a little more settled, I have deemed it expedient to defer it. Paris indeed is the Metropolis of the Continent, and anything published in the papers is read in nearly all parts of the Continent. The French if not spoken, is understood by a great many of the Continental Nations. Speaking of our organization, if religion was out of the question, and the matter was either social or political; thousands and tens of thousands would go to the Valley: As it is, it will be so shortly; and those passing through the ordeal of the Gospel, will make a better community. The Gospel net will gather a group sufficiently motley without taking them promiscuously. I rejoice to hear of your success, and of the prosperity of the Saints in the Valley, and I say; may the God of Israel pour the rich blessing of Heaven and earth on you and all the Saints. I often think of the brethren with you and in the Valley, and while wandering as a stranger in a strange land, which you from experience know how to appreciate, I often think of the society of my friends and home. The World has its glitter, pomp and parade; its stately edifices, splendid monuments and antiquated ruins, but its enjoyments are all fleeting and evanescent.—Its friendships are all hollow, and like its liberty, exists only in name, and while viewing the stately monuments, gorgeous palaces, and memorials of human greatness, folly and crime, I think of the Zion of God, and of the events that are yet to transpire in the accomplishment of His purposes of the redemption of the World—the wreck of humam greatness and the restitution of all things. When I behold the painted misery, the tinsel glare and the amount of poverty, distress and wretchedness that exists in these countries, my heart involuntarily turns to home; for in my wanderings through the world, I have found no principles so exalted—no friendship so pure—no society so virtuous, nor any people like the people of the Saints of the Most High; I have found no place like home, and when I shall have finished my mission, gladly shall I speed my way to the favored of Israel, and return to the bosom of my friends and home, and nothing but a desire to fulfill my mission to benefit the human family and build up Zion, would ever cause me to forego those enjoyments. But Br. Hyde, we are engaged in a work of Philanthropy and Benevolence, which although it is not now duly appreciated by many; yet it is a cause of joy to our bosoms, redeeming also thousands of our fellow men, and will be our crown of rejoicing in eternal worlds. I will now mention another subject:

The Presidency in their Epistle recommend the establishment of manufactures of various kinds. I have since the receipt of their Epistle organized a company to manufacture Sugar from the Sugar Beet on the same principle as it is done in France, so that we can have our own Sugar manufactured in the Valley, instead of being carried there by the Merchants. I expect in the fall of 1852, that there will be from one hundred and fifty to two hundred tons of Sugar made in the Valley, provided the Beets are raised; and I have sent on twelve hundred weight of Sugar Beet Seed, from Paris for this purpose. The seeds have gone out in the charge of Br. Loren Babbitt, and Br. William Howell from Wales, has taken means to purchase a team, &c., to carry them to the Valley. Will you be so kind as to see that they are forwarded, as it is a matter of some importance. The Machinery and men will come out next Spring, so as to manufacture Sugar next Fall. I suppose it will require at least thirty tons of Machinery. But the Sugar when made, will he as good as any Sugar. In France they have the best White Loaf Sugar made from the Beet.

I will briefly here show one principle: As near as I am prepared to say at present, it will take sixty men three months, to manufacture three hundred tons of Sugar; also sixty men three months more to raise the Beets. It would take three hundred men to carry the same amount of Sugar to the Valley, supposing even that it was got for nothing, not to mention cattle, wagons, &c. With a little additional Machinery the company will manufacture Oil from the Sun Flower Seed, Linseed or anything that will make Oil. Because there will be several Hydraulic Presses which are used for the Sugar, which will do for the Oil also.

I would here state that there is also another company formed for the purpose of establishing a large Wollen Manufactory. The best Machinery will be brought that can be purchased in England, and men brought out to work it. If me Merino Wool can be obtained, as good cloth can be manufactured as in the West of England. Cloths of various kinds will also be made; as also Merinos, Alpacas and other woman's wear; Blankets and Flannel. A great quantity of Wool will be required, from four to eight hundred weight per week. How are you situated for sheep? I don't know! The company will probably bring with them one thousand or two thousand Merino sheep, if they can be brought there. A great quantity will be required to supply the wants of the people. If encouragement was given to introduce more sheep, I think it would be well, and as many of the Merinos as possible; as fine wool is absolutely necessary for Broad Cloth, and woman's fine wear. Both of these companies are brethren, and I believe wish to do right. I hope Br's G. A. Smith and Benson, will soon succeed in making Iron. Among the persons that compose those companies, that I refer to are Br. Russell, of Merimashi, and Br's Coward & Collinson, of Liverpool.

If you should judge proper, I should be pleased for you to make some remarks in the Guardian, concerning the taking out of more sheep, as they would be as profitable an investment as could be made. Wool would both pay well, and be useful to the Saints.

If you have two or three good German Elders, I should like you to send them out as soon as they possibly can come; as I should like to have persons here competent to carry on the work.

Now Br. Hyde may the God of Israel bless you in all your administrations,—may the blessings of heaven and earth, of time and eternity be yours; and after having done good, and blessed others, may you obtain a crown in the Celestial Kingdom of our God. Amen.

I remain, my Dear Sir,
Your Fellow Laborer,
In the Kingdom of God.

America.

The Liverpool Journal says; "America exist to reproach and reform the world. There is a providence in these things—The rough and ready republicans expand themselves over a universe—the Union has just been enlarged by territories as large as Europe, and already the new State of California Exports half a million of gold a month, and prepares to open a steam communication with China and Japan. The Pacific becomes the highway of nations, and enterprise unheard of, approach maturity, while the mind of the ancient world is absorbed on the miserable subjects of divine right, and sectarian controversy. The majesty of civilization brightens regions rich and vast, while Europe pauses to parley with idiot legitimists and ancient nonentities. The Republic of America bids fair for the mastery of the world, and will have it."

SINGULAR FACT.—The hair of the Caucasian, or white man, is an oval tube, with a large oval perforation, that of the negro, oval but perfectly solid; that of the Indian circular and perfectly solid, by this simple test the characteristics of the individual may be ascertained by an examination of the hair, In this way, a thread of hair is a key to a knowledge of the whole animal; as a tooth is to Owen of London, and a scale of a fish to Cuvier and Agassiz.

Inquisitive people are the funnels of conversation; they do not take in anything for their own use, but merely to pass it to another.

Quatations from President B. Young's Sermon, at the Bowery, Sunday, December 29th, 1850.

The Saints met in the Bowery at 11, A. M., the meeting was called to order by Daniel Spencer—Singing, &c.

"President Young said, I will preach from my old text, 'Truth' my subject is salvation; and my circuit is the world. If I continue to preach the truth it will do for to-day. I wish you to consider the nature of the human mind that is connected with the divine spirit, and while that spirit is in the tabernacle, they act so conjointly in all their operations that the division cannot be made, even by the philosopher, although he can discover the organization—when the spirit enters into the tabernacle they are not to be seperated. We can discover the weaknesses of this organization; for instance, the child, as soon as it can use its hands, wants to handle that which does not belong to it; such as the looking-glass, or razor. This spirit, or mind, or disposition, is manifested in every character on the earth. As soon as the child can stand on its feet, and can travel, it tries to obtain something he should not have. Its disposition is to grasp after that which is not good for it. I can find some in this congregation, who have arrived at manhood, they can analyze it; when they come to riper years they discipline the mind as it is called. The best plan is to discipline the child in the beginning, and when the child is brought into subjection to the rod, it soon learns not to reach beyond itself. The secret of these remarks I can tell you.

In this place, here are the Elders of Israel, many of them have forgotten the depths of misery they have been in, and they want to go again into the bowels of wickedness, and they cannot discover the difference between a peaceable society, and those that love not God. If there are but few, there are enough to raise a stench in the whole community. The Elders are forever wanting that which they should not have; and ever desiring to do that which will mar their peace; and this is applied to all kingdoms that now are, or ever will be organized to enjoy immortality and eternal lives; yet it is destined for all to know the bitter and the sweet, and have the knowledge of good and evil.

The child is crazy for a fork or knife, anything that will hurt it; this seems foolish to you, and some children when they grow up, think they can dictate the Father—the old proverb, 'young folks think old folks fools, but old folks know yonng ones to be so.' I apply to the Elders of Israel; you think I am foolish, and I know you ar; their eyes are after things that do not belong to them; but do they contemplate the walk they should be in for their highest happiness? No. Yet there are some as good people here as any on earth. You can behold this folly in the child, in grown people, and even in societies, eternally grasping after that, that will make them unhappy and miserable. I can give you the key,—if there is no conflict I cannot gain a victory, if I cannot gain a victory, there is no crown of reward. We should do those things that we ought, and not do those things which we ought not; for instance, I will take the luxuries of life, tea, coffee, tobacco and spirits—they are all alluded to in the word of wisdom. Why do you use them? You may reply, it is a habit. I tell you it is because they are narcotic poison, which operate on the nervous system and cause watchfulness, or sleep—they relax and stimulate, and in the end tend to death; if it was not for that, you would not be attached to them, you would not like them, if they did not hurry you to your graves. They operate on the spirits also; if they did not, you would never desire, through their influence to do wrong; when the poisonous article comes in contact, it revolutionizes the system to a certain degree, and that is the reason why men are inclined to do wrong. We ought to overcome this propensity and gain the victory, not only in temporal things but in spiritual things also. If you hate a thing that is good, you are inclined to do evil, and that is a great luxury to the wicked, as the bottle is to the drunkard. Whenever the time comes that you hate an object or a thing try and heap blessings on the object, and it will be well for you; for it will take away those feelings, and it is certain that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

"I am looking at a people who have been driven from their homes and firesides, sacrificing their goods to a wicked mob—seeking to find a place where they can be at peace, and when they get common sense enough they will enjoy it. If you ask the people to pay their tithing, some of them answer they are too poor; or if you ask them to pay their taxes to help build bridges and keep them in repair, they are too poor even to do that; and some cannot even go to Utah when they are wanted—but they can go very well to the gold mines, because that is their God. If I cannot put away tobacco or spirits, it proves that I am a slave to lust which tends to death."

"I behold goodness and kindness in a majority of this people, yet there are a few garrs and sharks that have been caught in the net, that are a disgrace to the whole. I do actually see men and families, who have not had raiment to wear, or a house to be in, in a sickly country—and now when they are well clad and are living in good houses, they want to leave them and go to California. I say unto them go your way, you are welcome, I am glad of it, and I do not care how quick they go, for they are corrupt, and want to hear blasphemy from Sunday morning to Saturday evening—to see card tables and drunkenness; many of them are bound to go to hell, where they will see, and hear, and feel the torments of the damned, and the time will come when they will be glad to come out again."

"Look again at the child with the fork, it may put out an eye with it; or when it has the razor, it may cut itself. Many of you, Elders of Israel, are just as foolish; I tell it you in the name of the Lord God Almighty. Am I merciful to the weaknesses of man? I am! I realize it! Were it not for the mercy of my Father in Heaven, I should have been cut down like many others. When I see a man commit folly in his weakness, am I to stretch forth my hand to destroy that man? No! But I will pull him out of the pit if I can; my heart is open, and would as soon you could see it as my face. My Father in Heaven gives me the privilege of life and death, and if this privilege were taken from you, you would be mere machines, and cease to act on your agency."

"This people is addicted to, and it is a fault, to be always searching after doctrine, and never improving upon what they have; they want something new, something that they never heard. I doubt you have not heard all I have said this day. Get up here ye Elders of Israel, and tell what is in you! It is hard work to get a man to come on this stand, to feed the flock; how dormant you are. But many of the Elders say they want to go away and preach to the people in the world. Is there any bigger folks than we are, that would hear you? Yes there is. Ye Elders of Israel, ye men of God, how much do you know about the Kingdom of God? and yet ye are always wanting to know something more, when you ought to improve upon what you have."

"The Prophet Joseph said to me, about sixteen years ago, 'If I was to show the Latter-day Saints all the revelations that the Lord has shown unto me, there is scarce a man that would stay with me; they could not bear it.' What is there so horrid, that you cannot bear it? Every trait in character that has been infused into man, since the fall, is as diametrically opposed as light is to darkness.

Ye Elders of Israel, do you know the ways of God? If the Lord himself was to speak, to tell the Latter-day Saints what to do, he would come in the capacity of an Elder in Israel, and he would preach to you—you would hear precisely the very things that you do now. You may think I do not know, but I know you don't. Let me reveal a little of the will of the Lord. If you do not believe that I tell you the very truth as the secret of the heart of God, you never will be nigher to him than you now are. If he were to come in his power and glory you would dissolve away and go down to hell. He will either appear, and you dissolve away, or he will come in the capacity of a man."

"Many men think ten times more of a foolish, untimely dancing party, than of a prayer meeting. The man that knows the things of God, can say as the old Prophet did, 'I would rather spend one day with the Lord, than ten thousands days elsewhere.' One good Conference, one evening spent in this manner is sweeter to me than all the frolics that can be got up. Dancing is only to exercise the body, to enable it to attend to things of greater importance. When eternal principles are carried out to every portion of human life, from the birth to the grave, they bring peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

"I will now refer to the Seventies as a body,—suppose I should appoint a meeting for to-night, about a dozen would come, without any candles—but if I were to say—level this stand for the band that we may have a dance, they would bring the stoves from their wives' bedsides, and would dance all night, and the house would be filled to overflowing. Oh foolish Elders! you are like the foolish child, you want the fork to put out you eyes. I make the same application to the High Priests and Elders. I feel sometimes that I could cuff every Elders ears—at other times I could cry over their follies. I have good reason for these remarks."

"Elders, ask yourselves this question—'am I not an Elder, am I not to preach to all, Saints and Sinners?' The proof of your choice is in your conduct. Now appoint your meetings, and if you want a partner, the Lord will go with you, and the next meeting you appoint you will have a third person with you. As for myself, I would rather sit down in the poorest house in this place, and converse on the things of God, than to go ninety-nine out of one hundred parties that are got up,—and these are my real feelings. I go, to please my brethren. There is no sin in all the acts of mankind, only to him that makes it a sin. There is no evil in anything, only to him that makes it so; we ought to do all things that tend to building up the Kingdom, and to the glory of God."

Life is a great blessing, but only when used for the purposes of its bestowal. He who values it so highly as to avoid performing its duties lest he should lose it, has already sacrificed all its value, and is living not a life, but a death—While, then, we seek to secure sound health of body and mind, let us not foolishly neglect the greater duties of a self-sacrificing humanity and benevolence. This proper and faithful performauce is life—without them life is but the bondage of selfishness and fear—a perpetual dying through the fear of death.

FRIDAY, JUNE 27, 1851.

Thomas Jefferson Sutherland, and the Saint Joseph Gazette.

The above gentleman has written a very spicy letter against the Mormons in Pottawatamie, to Hon. Luke Lea, commissioner of Indian affairs; and this letter is published in the St. Joseph Gazette, and its truth endorsed by the Editor in the following language. "The exceptions of Gen. S. to their course (the Mormons) are well taken, and the arguments which he has used against them will not be broken down by any explanations which can be made." The Gazette is anxious to enforce the Gag law at once, and to stop our breathing before we have a chance to extricate ourself. If the famous Gen. Sutherland's arguments cannot be broken down by any explanations that can be made; we will make one suggestion to the Gazette man, which, at some future time, circumstances may compel him to respect. The endorsing of bad paper too freely will bankrupt and break down as strong and able men as the Editor of that Journal.

This said Thomas Jefferson Sutherland figured considerably in the Canadian Rebellion. He is said to be a roving debauchee, having whipped his wife, and abandoned her to the world, and has become partially deranged; and in truth, is a vagabond. We have these statements from a gentleman of high standing, a lawyer of the first respectability who is from the neighborhood in the State of New York, where he whipped and abandoned his wife, and says that he is a notorious rake, and that no decent woman can live with him: and observed that it might be expected that such a man would not hesitate to talk about the libidinous conduct of virtuous, but unfortunate widows. This gentleman is now sitting in our office while we write. But now, for our own knowledge of this Canadian Rebel.

Some eight weeks ago, he visited our town, and called at our office, and introduced himself as a very great and consequential man. Indeed, he talked as though he was clothed with plenary powers from the Government at Washington, particularly from the General Land Office, and was a lawyer of the heaviest calibre; and the famous Gen. Sutherland of Navy Island Memory into the bargain. After hearing all this in an off hand braggadocio style; we thought, surely, we had got a strange dignitary indeed:

He seemed very anxious to convince us that the laws of Iowa, touching claims on the public lands, were unconstitutional, and entirely contrary to the instructions which he had received from the General Land Office: After some little conversation with him, we concluded that he was a renegade impostor; though in some remarks, he manifested talent and learning: but we finally told him, after we saw that gentle words and courteous behavior would not satisfy him, that he should go to Iowa City and regulate the law making department there, and not seek to get into a quarrel with us about the laws of the State. He said that he was pleased with our town, and that it was the only civil place he had been in for a long time. In almost every other place, he said, he had been threatened to be shot, rode on rail, or tarred and feathered. We did not take these statements as a very flattering recommend; but however, he said the Mormons had not violated the law, but the Gentiles in Fremont County about McKissicks Grove, were outragous. They were claiming all the land, &c., and we presume he told them the same about us. He appeared to be all things to all men. We then told him if they were so far out of the way in Fremont, he should go there and regulate them, and not trouble us who were all right according to his statements. But contention and controversy seemed to be his only elements; and we, at length, told him frankly, in presence of a number of people, that we were satisfied with the laws that regulated our claims—that we had lived in peace together, both Jews and Gentiles;—that we had good society and good neighbors, quiet and peaceable; and that if he, or any other man came among us to stir up strife and contention, we possessed both the dispossition and the nerve to make him leave; and that the highest favor any such character could bestow upon us, was to leave us before his protracted stay should compel us to put the vagrant law in force. Upon this he soon sloped, and was fired up with a spirit that produced the wonderful letter to the Commissioner of Indian affairs, and published in the Gazette, and endorsed by its Editor.

There was but one opinion in this upper Country concerning this vanquished patriot, so far as we have been able to learn: and that was, that he was "CRACKED," and that the contents of every organ of the head had leaked out, except the contents of the organs of Combativeness and Self-esteem. He was regarded as being half knave, a quarter crazy, one-eight gass, and the balance mule. This man has roamed over Canada, and throughout the United States; but has never found a kindred, sympathizing spirit who could endorse his sentiments with an assurance that bade defiance to successful contradiction, until he found the Editor of the St. Joseph Gazette, that we have ever read of. This couple appear to be true yoke-fellows, both cordial and reciprocal in their feelings, and as we are in favor of the Union, we here say: may it never be dissolved.

Now to the despoiling of the Indian Country by the Mormons of its game and timber. But the Gazette says no explanations can break down the Gen'l's arguments. We do not expect to break them down in the Editor's estimation, neither in the estimation of a stupid ass. Our explanations are only addressed to men of sense, candor, and reason. The Mormons stopped for a season in the Omaha Country in 1846, by the permission of the Indians, and also by the permission of the Government. This was a matter of necessity, occasioned by the requisition of the Government upon our emigrating camps for five hundred men to go into the public Service. Let us here ask, if we must always, and eternally, be goaded by fools and scoundrels for stopping upon Indian lands when the Government found us passing through them and required five hundred of our men to leave their teams and families in tents, unprotected and unprovided for; a thing unheard of before or since in the annals of the world? If hell does not catch such unfeeling and unprincipled men who goad us for this, we shall strongly petition for that post, in the dominions of the Almighty, to be evacuated, and its officers and troops disbanded, and turned out of service for not doing their duty.

The timber for houses and fuel used by the Mormons on the Omaha lands, was mostly taken from the Pottawatamie purchase across the river on the ice, and but very little timber was cut on the Omaha side. This is a fact so notorious that the Agent on this side objected to it: We have never been in any country where game was more scarce than in that part of the Omaha country where we stopped for a season, and through which all emigrants to California, Oregon, and Salt Lake, pass. One principle reason urged by the Indians themselves, for killing so many of our cattle, was, that their country afforded them no game, and they must kill our cattle or die. Their country has not been injured by the Mormon emigration or any other emigration. They had killed out all the game themselves before any emigrants saw it; and it is but very little timber that emigrants use. A little of that which lies on the ground suffices for fuel. This kind is most easily obtained and the driest and best to burn. Consequently, what the Indians beg and steal from emigrants, is of ten times more value to them than all the injury they receive; and the Indians would not have the emigration cease from passing through their country for hardly any consideration: Yet they pretend that it does them a great deal of injury, because, by these pretentions, they can put on a face to exact tribute, to beg and to steal.

These same Indians have killed more game on our side, about fifty miles north of us in the State of Iowa, in three days, than the Mormons and all other emigrants ever killed in their country, and put it all together. These Indians are permitted to hunt on our side every year without molestation, only when they fall upon our cattle. In the act of killing and skinning an ox, a short time ago, the owner shot an Indian and wounded him; but he recovered.

The Mormons, instead of monopolizing this Pottawatamie Country and parceling it out to their followers, as Gen. Sancho Panza de Gulliver says, they are anxious to sell all their claims to any people who will pay them for their labor and improvments, though it is one of the best countries in the world. The General knew he lied when he said this, if he knew anything about it, and when he talks about honest and industrious citizens of the United States being excluded from participating in the settlement of this country "if they are not members of our associations and clubs," does not the Gazette man himself know that the General lied, and that he endorsed his statements. Have so many people from Weston, St. Joseph, Savannah, and from various other places, settled and done business here who do not belong to our Church, and are just as free as any other people, and the Editor of a public Journal so near, not know it, when some of his own neighbors are here? The Gazette commenced an unprovoked attack upon us, and based his operations upon wicked falsehood, and has not soul or honor enough to confess it, or apologize in any form, and he seems to have a particular relish for that kind of food. We will not quarrel with him about it. He may have it, and have it all. But the good Book says something about making lies their refuge, and under falsehood hiding themselves. It says they shall have their part in the fire:

So far as whipping the Indians is concerned, we have only to say, that we have acted under the immediate instructions of the Government agents, and we shall continue to do so until the Government provides some other means of protection on this Frontier. And some of our Gentile friends here might mistake the General for an Indian, and treat him accordingly, if he should revisit the town. We cannot vouch for this however. We should like to know, what clause of the Intercourse Law authorizes the General to go among the Indians to make them dissatisfied with the whites and with the emigration through their country. If a man will do this, he is bad enough to sell liquor to the Indians, and we do not know of any who has done so from this side of late, unless it is the General himself.

The Gazette, it seems, is disposed to take a good deal of responsibility in publishing against Mormons; and we now feel that we have done our duty towards him and Gen. Thomas Jefferson Sutherland; and as we said once, that we had no further use for that Journal until he gave us the name of his "Kanesville Informant," which he has failed to do; we shall pay just that attention to him, hence forth, that we would to any other outlaw.

James J. Strang.

This notorious impostor and wicked man, as we have long anticipated, is at length in the custody of the law, for his crimes and offences. Would to Heaven, that when he was cut off from our Church for imposition and blasphemy, he had been compelled to leave the Mormon name, and not to wear it to the dishonor of those who wish to adorn it Offences must come, but woe to them by whom they come. The Saints should be patient, and endure hardness as good soldiers, and never dishonor their own profession; then the folly and wickedness of others, we shall endure but for a moment.

Saleratus.

The April number of the Deseret news says: The brethren who are coming west, will do well to bring all the saleratus they can from the Saleratus Lake, situated about one mile north of the Sweetwater, and four miles east of Independence Rock. Many who have used the Sweetwater Saleratus, prefer it to the artificial in common use.

CONSUMPTION OF LIQUOR IN THE U. S.—In 1836, the consumption of spiritous Liquors, beer and wine in the U. S. was computed at 623,000,000 of gallons, and in 1550, at 583,000,000 of gallons—decrease in 14 years 40,000,000 of gallons. This is encouraging to the friends of temperance.

Treaty.

Having learned, a few days, ago that the Omaha Chiefs were at their village, we sent for them, to come and see us. They came under the protection of Francis J. Wheeling, Esq., whose prompt and efficient services were worthy the admiration of the Indians and also of the whites. Their interpreter came with them.

We held a Council at Kanesville. Some hundreds of people attended. The cannon or howitzer from Fort Leavenworth was also at the Council, and spoke with an eloquence and power that made the chiefs rather quail. His Honor, Judge Brocchus, en route to Salt Lake, was present. The Chiefs denied any hostile intentions—professed themselves ready to do anything that we wanted, and promised to restrain their young men from committing any depredations upon the emigrants so far as they could. And we promised, if they did behave, and not molest the emigrants, to make them some presents after the emigration was over.

We do know, from reliable authority, that they did design evil against the emigrants; but when they saw our determination to chastise them if they did interfere with the trains, they changed their intentions and denied them. Judge Brocchus spoke handsomely to them, and to the point. All things went off amicably under the fire of three guns. We told the Indians, if they interrupted the emigrants, all the powder and lead we gave them, would be in that big gun, and in smaller arms.

To Our Agents at Home and Abroad.

As many of the brethren, no doubt, have left without calling at our office to change their papers from here to Salt Lake; our agents in this County and elsewhere, would be doing us a favor, and the parties concerned a benefit, by giving us, as soon as practicable, the names of those who still have their papers sent to their old residence, but have left themselves for the Valley. Our agents will perceive the necessity of this matter being attended to as soon as possible, so as to keep up an amicable feeling between us and the subscribers, although it is an evident neglect of the latter detrimental to their own interest.

Bacon Stolen.

We learn, that on Sunday evening last, a friend of ours left some bacon in a barrel, on Hyde Street, opposite Mr. Jackson's Blacksmith Shop, thinking that all was safe; but to his surprise and loss, he found the barrel empty on Monday morning. Now we say to the thief, you are known, and unless you return that bacon forthwith to the spot from whence you took it, or to the owner, Mr. J. C. Little, who may be found at Messrs. Gooch's warehouse, on Hyde Street, you shall have a just recompense, as a reward for evil doing; besides, you shall be made to appear conspicuous in a place that may at present be entirely foreign to your views.

Garden Grove.

The citizens of Garden Grove, feel that Elder Cordon has done them great injustice in publishing that they have drank about $800 worth of liquor in two years. They deny it: and say that Elder C. obtained his information from their enemies who are accusers of the brethren: They say that he never called upon them to reprove them for the supposed wrong. They admit that some there have drank too much; but to brand the whole as drunkards, for the weaknesses of a few, they consider uncalled for and unjust, and think that Elder C. owes them an apology.

Pure Lemon Syrup.

Mr. Henry A. Terry, of Little Pigeon, presented us a bottle of the above article. In justice to our friend and the Syrup we pronounce it the best that we have ever tasted. It is neither too sweet nor too sour, but just what it should be; a good, cool, and wholesome summer drink, when diluted with good clear cold water, and well worthy the consideration of all such as love a pleasant and harmless drink.

Suggestion.

In consequence of the incessant rains for the last sixty days, the wheat and corn crops must be light: therefore, every farmer should lay up a good supply of hay. Grass is abundant, and of a good quality; and much of it will be needed for stock next winter, and also for the Spring's emigration. Cut and put up hay, and you will doubtless get pay for your labor.

Corn.

A few hundred bushels of corn wanted on old debts and for the Guardian.

Now is your time; come on with your corn and you will accommodate us very much.

The International Monthly Magazine.

The June number of this excellent work is before us, and as usual replete with choice matter, both instructive and amusing. This magazine is devoted to literature, art, and science, and should be in the hands of every maiden, and accomplished gentleman; we do not know a periodical of its character more worthy of a liberal support and patronage. It is published by Stringer & Townsend, 222 Broadway, New York, at the rate of 25 cents, each number.

The Washington Union says: We understand that the Mexican government has, through its minister in this city, made formal reclamtion for the depredations which have been committed by Indians living in the limits of the United States."

The price of printing in San Francisco is $1 25 per thousand ems; the usual charge in the Atlantic States is about 27 to 30 cents.

A telegraph line will soon be completed to St Paul in Minnesota.

Daniel Webster was nominated for the Presidency, at a Whig meeting held in Yorktown, Virginia, recently.

The ancient Pyramids, temples, obelisks and tombs of Egypt, are being converted into stone quarries, to supply building materials for this practical generation of progress, to the great annoyance of travelers and antiquaries.

Such are the railway facilities in the neighborhood of Boston, that one hundred and seventeen members of the Massachusetts Legislature are enabled to board at home. This estimate does not include the 50 Boston Members.

ADDENDA TO THE

Fifth General Epistle of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, from Great Salt Lake Valley, State of Deseret, to the Saints scattered throughout the Earth, Greeting:

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Some items having escaped notice in our communication of the 7th inst., we again resume the pen, in reference particularly to the necessary supplies of sugar, molasses and honey, for the citizens of Deseret. Some experiments have been made with beets, in the manufacture of molasses and vinegar, mostly in private families, the specific result of which, in minute detail, we are not informed; but we have learned for a certainty, that with little labor, any family who have a supply of beets can make themselves comfortable for molasses, though the art of removing the gas and foreign matter, is not sufficiently understood to secure so perfect an article as is desirable. Vinegar has been produced from the same source, of a good quality. Let the brethren bring all the white sugar-beet seed they possibly can for years to come.

Messrs. Beach & Eddy, of St. Louis, and Blair of Texas, have opened a general manufacturing establishment this Spring, mostly too late for sugar, but progressing in making molasses and vinegar. It is expected that this establishment will continue its operations, and be prepared for more extended labors on the approach of another harvest, but it will not be possible for one factory to supply all the sweet that will be needed; and if a practical chemist and manufacturer of sugar from the beet, one who understands the business in all its bearing, or a company of individuals who are severally versed in the various branches, could come to this place and open their sugar factories, our farmers and families would gladly surrender their domestic operations, and procure their supplies in a more perfect form, from the factories; and it would now require several extensive establishments to supply the people. It is our wish that the Presidency in England, France, and other places, should search out such practical operators in the manufacture of sugar, as fully understand their business, and forward them to this place, with all such apparatus as may be needed, and cannot be procured here.

Several swarms of bees, that have been brought from the States, are doing well in the Valley, and it is very desirable for the brethren to bring all the bees they can; for it is believed they will flourish here; and so far as honey can be produced, it will supercede the necessity of making sugar; and if there were ever so much sugar, honey is needed as a medicine, as well as a luxury.

Salt Lake Mail.

The following from the Occidental Messenger of the 24th ult., communicates the cheering intelligence of the safety of Mr. Arnall; also his suffering through snow and frost on his way to the Valley with the December Mail:

The mail under the charge of Mr. W. H. ARNALL, reached here on the 20th inst., having left Salt Lake City on the 1st of April. Mr. A. left this place on the 1st of December in charge of the mail and until his return was generally supposed to have perished in the mountains during winter. But he succeeded in getting through, performing one of the most perilous trips ever accomplished by a human being and reached Salt Lake City on the 7th of March. At one time he lay near the Pacific Spring for seven weeks where it snowed upon him for seventeen successive days and nights—Four of his mules froze to death, but by close attention he succeeded in keeping alive the remaining three he had with him. For long distances, he and the two men with him were compelled to open roads through the snow five feet deep for the mules to travel in.

The January mail out, reached Salt Lake about the first of April.

On their way in they met a considerable number of emigrants for Oregon; comparatively few for California. Met the train of our fellow citizens, Phelps & Chiles, a considerable distance ahead of all other traders and getting on finely.

Groceries at Salt Lake were very scarce and commanding high prices. Sugar and coffee were selling at $1 per pound; whisky at $8 per pint. The prospect for those traders who should get in first, was very flattering.

BOSTON, May 30.

Thompson, the English abolitionist, made a speech at Boylston hall, to-day, in which they denounced the Colonization Society as the spawn of two abominations—the church and the devil. Garrison and the Rev. Mr. May were also down on the colonization movement.

A reward of $500 has been offered for the arrest of James McNally, who stabed Mr. Charles S. Smith, of this city, on the 16th instant, causing his death on Monday last. McNally is an Irishman, about forty-five years old, and is supposed to have fled to New York.

The trial of Scott, for aiding in the rescue of Shadrach, was resumed this morning, Richard Dana, Esq., opening for the defence.

A handbill was posted about the streets last night, denouncing Thompson, the English abolitionist, and calling upon the people to drive him from the city. No notice is taken of it.

Oysters.

The Printers say that oysters bought with money, gratuitously paid, for publishing marriages, have a most agreeable flavor: Wonderful discovery! We hope that marriages and oysters may always be in the land; particularly if cake and wine are scarce.

CHARLESTON, May 27.

The steamer Isabel arrived from Havana, with Panama dates to 22d.

The rumors of the intended invasion of Cuba by Gen. Lopez, created no great sensation; great vigilence, however, continued to be observed around the coast.

Later from California—Arrival of the Oregon.

NEW YORK, June 3d.

The Oregon has arrived from Chagres—business is much improved and prospects are recovering.

The steamer Union brought 200 passengers and $150,000 in gold dust. The Oregon brought 75 passengers and $800,000 in gold, and the Republic 200 passengers and $1,000,000 in gold—the whole amount received has been $2,500,000, besides what was in the hands of passengers, probably $1,000,000 more.

At Gorgona, Miller's Hotel was struck with lightning and one man killed.

The wet season had set in two weeks earlier than usual. Some 300 passengers were waiting at Chagres for the Falcon to New Orleans.

The passengers of the Gold Hunter were not allowed to land at Tehauntepec.

A severe earthquake occurred at Valparaiso.

The miners in California were reaping a rich harvest. Considerable progress has been made by the Commissioners in forming a treaty with the Indians, though the latter were still continuing their depredations in the vicinity of Los Angelos.

There has been much snow in the mountains and several are reported to have lost their lives.

The prospects for good crops were favorable; business has revived considerably, and the confidence of the citizens in the future progress of the State is unabated.

The Sacramento Transcript has detailed accounts from the mines. The Georgetown diggings were paying well; some three hundred persons were at work, averaging $3 to $16. There are some 700 or 800 miners in Sodel Valley, who were doing well.

The Stockton Times gives some interesting accounts of the discovery of rich quartz veins in the Southern mines. The editors state that it has been established satisfactorily, that the quartz vein will eventually form an inexhaustible mine of wealth to the country.

The Marysville Herald says, that none of the miners are making less than an ounce a day.

Quite a number of cases of lynching have occurred. Two brothers, named William and John McMurtry, were hung by the populace at the Mochel mines on the 9th of April. Among the deaths in California were Andrew McIlvaine of Pittsburg, and Michael Conn of Indiana.

The Empire City is now coming up the harbor.

Later from California.

The Empire City, from Chagres, has arrived; she brings 350 passengers and $2,000,000 in gold dust.

We have dates from the Sandwich Islands to March 29th. The difficulty with the French had been amicably arranged.

News by the Canada.

The mails by the steamer Canada, at Boston from Liverpool, have been received.

The City article of the Times says:

"In addition to the temporary stoppage of a firm at Liverpool yesterday, another failure to a large amount has been announced there, the house being that of Mr. Victor Pontz, a cotton importer, whose liabilities are said to be for £200,000."

The failure of Messrs. W. & D. Olden burg, a German house at Leeds, has been announced. The total liabilities are supposed to be between £50,000 and £60,000, of which some firms in London are loosers. It was not a long established house, but was considered respectable.

The commercial and diplomatic circles at Berlin have been startled by the bankruptcy and flight of the banker who conducted the financial business of the Russian embassy, M. Philliyi. The liabilities are said to amount to 100,000 thalers; whether there are any assets is not known. The chief creditors are the house of Franckel, in Warsaw, and the immediate family connexions of the insolvent. Several other private persons suffer severely by the event. One official is named who has lost by it the whole of his property.

In the House of Commons Mr. Lack's bill providing that all religious houses, consisting of associations of females, bound together by monasterial vows should be registered, and that magistrates should be appointed at quarter sessions, empowered to visit them without notice, and to liberate those, if any, who may be detained against their will, was defeated on the 14th inst., by 23 majority.

In the same body, on the 15th, in reply to a question from Mr. T. Duncombe, Lord J. Russell said that the repeal of the window duty would depend in a great measure upon the course the House might take in regard to other duties.

In the House of Lords, on the 16th, a question by Lord Stanley led to some discussion relative to the propriety of affording Parliamentary aid for the construction of railways in British America. Earl Grey said a question of that importance required mature consideration, and the Government was not prepared, under present circumstances, to take upon itself the responsibility of encouraging a work of such magnitude.

The Great Exhibition is more popular than ever—On the 15th, the receipts from visitors rose higher than ever. The 5s. contributions amounted to £2,130, and the sale of season tickets, which still goes on prosperously, swelled the total sum taken to £3,300. Even the executive committee are astonished with their own success, and it now seems difficult to say at what point their financial fortunes may stop.

Vessels are continually sailing from various ports in South Wales with emigrants, and ere long a large body of Latter-Day Saints will find their way, it is said, to Bristol, Liverpool, and other out ports, for the purpose of emigrating to the great Mormon city or settlement on the bank of the Great Salt Water Lake. Many of these Mormonites are employed in the iron districts of Glamorganshire, and comprise some of the best and most experienced workmen.

Thirty-two passenger vessels, with 3,546 emigrants for Canada and the United States, sailed from Limerick between 1st January and 1st May, being a period of four months.

Fast.

In consequence of the continued rains and floods, and the gloomy prospects for crops, it has been ordained in Council, that Friday (to-day) be observed as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer; and that we sanctify our fasting and our prayers, by a sin offering to God, in the shape and form of something good for the poor to eat and enjoy, and place the same in the hands of the Bishop to be distributed to the needy.

In the above, all people, of every profession and creed,—besides those of no creed, are interested: and those who never prayed before, should pray now, and should also remember the poor, and the poor of any creed or profession should share in the offerings, if their conduct renders them worthy. We are all God's creatures and can feel want when it pinches us.

Pray that the rains and floods may be stayed—that the earth may produce food for man and beast. Repent of all thy wrongs—settle all thy difficulties with thy neighbor. If thou hast wronged or injured any brother, sister, friend or neighbor, go and make it right as far as lieth in you, then come and offer thy gift, and thy sins may be blotted out. Those branches that do not get this word in season to observe this day, may appoint a day to suit their convenience, provided it be directly after hearing of said fast and offerings. Forget this not: It is important, and if you would have health and plenty, observe it with all your hearts. Peace be with the faithful; Amen! Congregations will assemble at their usual places of worship at 10 o'clock, A. M., of said day. Remember, also, the emigrants on the plains.

DROWNED.—A Young man of the name of Anderson, was drowned in a slough, while bathing, on Sunday the 15th, inst.

Beet Seed.

Elder Loren Babbitt, lately from England, has taken through with him this season to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, twelve hundred pounds of Sugar Beet Seed.

This seed was raised in France,—purchased by Elder John Taylor, and sent to England carefully put up in large boxes cased with tin, and from thence to this country, in care of Elders Howell & Babbitt. The reason of this importation is for the purpose of raising the Beet; from which, after going through a manufacturing process the people in the Valley expect to be supplied with Sugar. Elder John Taylor's letter, which is placed on the first page of the paper, outside; gives the necessary information relative to the manner in which this project is to be prosecuted.

This scheme with others in connection equally important, cannot fail to produce on the public mind, a correct impression of the enterprizing policy that the Saints in the Valley are pursuing; and also, shut the mouths of those specimens of human depravity, who have eagerly desired and endeavored heretofore to prejudice the minds of the people against us as a community. Truth is mighty and will prevail. Error may for a season cloud the vision, and mislead the judgement, like a cloud in the horison obstructing the genial rays of the sun; but like the King of Day, the influence of this mighty Champion is felt more sensibly after the cloud has passed away.

WASHINGTON, May 29—P. M.

The proposition to establish an annual American Fair here, meets with much favor: liberal subscriptions are already made, and the organization is soon to be effected.

FRIDAY, JUNE 27, 1851.

Miniature View of the Disastrous Effects of the Late Rains.

A Correspondent of the Missouri Republican, writes from Alexandria, Clark Co., Missouri, under date of May 31st, and says:

Our whole city is completely inundated, and both the Des Moines and Mississippi rivers are still rising. The water is in every dwelling house, with but three exceptions, and a large number of our people have crossed the river and gone to Warsaw.

The water extends back to the Bluff, a distance of seven miles, and the crops are destroyed and the fences swept away. In some parts of the town the water is five or six feet deep, and in the dwellings two or three feet.

Last evening the citizens of Warsaw held a meeting and appointed a committee of thirteen, of which Dr. William English is Chairman, to invite us to that town and partake of their hospitality until the water subsides, and to-day a large number will go over.

We are deeply indebted to Dr. English, the proprietor of the Steam Ferry, for his liberality in transporting our citizens and their stock across the river, free of charge, and for inviting us to his house and offering to pasture our cattle.

In haste, Yours L.

The Dubuque Tribune of the same date say:

Mail communication and business intercourse between town and country are almost entirely suspended. Nobody can get in, and nobody can get out, unless it is by way of the river, or else swimming streams, and splashing through mud, to a greater extent than is agreeable, or, at all times entirely safe.

Another heavy fall of rain occurred last night and this morning. This will keep the earth saturated, and the streams up. The Mississippi is still rising, though not so rapidly as reported yesterday.

The Burlington Telegraph says:

The Illinois is reported far above its banks, and a wide spread desolation marks its course.

What is to be the effect of this great flood upon the lower country Heaven only knows, but present appearances would indicate that a dreadful fate awaits it. The southern streams are all reported at an unusual high stage, and when to these shall be added the mighty torrents now rolling onward from the northern streams, we shall probably hear of a deluge such as has never been known upon this continent.

The following from the Burlington Hawk-Eye of the 24 inst., report:

The water in this part of the Mississippi is about as high as it was in 1844, and in what we learn from above—we mean all the way from Minnesota, with no allusion to the floods which are still emptying their reservoirs—it threatens to be up to the mark of '44, which was six feet higher than in '41 or the highest on record. Already, many of the towns, situated as are Marion City and Louisiana, on the Missouri side, are completely submerged. In passing down to Fort Madison on Thursday last, we saw several cabins, on both sides of the river, that were surrounded by water, which had already entered the first story windows.

The Oquawka Spectator of the 21st inst., contains the following:

The waters are upon us! We write amid scene of confusion and excitement seldom witnessed. All the business portion of our town, except one or two houses, is covered with water deep enough to afford passage to steamboats. The condition of affairs is beyond description, and can only be realized by being seen. The flood of '41 was trifling in comparison with the present; and as nearly as it can now be ascertained, the memorable rise of 1828 failed of reaching the present mark.

The accounts from below are gloomy enough. Through the politeness of Capt. Wade of the fine steamer Dubuque, who stopped a while to give us the news, we are enabled to give our readers a few particulars. Capt. B. tells us that he never witnessed such devastations as the flood is now making from Alton up; almost every place is partly under water. At Hannibal, and for seven miles above and for fifty miles below, the river was six miles wide. Marion City is entirely inundated and all communication cut off with the back country. Several large rafts have been sucked out upon the prairies below by the force of the current. At the Rapids Hotel, in Keokuk, water stood eighteen inches deep on the first floor on Sunday night. Capt. B. says that nearly all the wood has been washed away, and yet the bulk of the rise had not yet reached the lower towns. The Missouri is high, and the Illinois is still rising.

Great damage has been done along the river above. Several large mills have been swept away, and a number of warehouses inundated. The steamer Kate Kearney went up on Monday to the relief of Port Louisa, which place was entirely submerged. Capt. Drew, six miles below, is surrounded by water, and has removed with his effects to Oquawka. An event which has long been expected, threatens to take place very shortly—we refer to the passage the river is now wearing away through the ridge that separates the river and the "Big Lake," in the lower end of Drew's farm. If this should be accomplished, there is a probability that the main channel will be on this side of a large Island between it and Burlington, and join the old current again at a point above Shokokon.

The Bridge across the Big Slough, on the road to Burlington, has been swept away. The Telegraph says that in Burlington, houses situated on the bottom were from six to eight feet under, Tuesday morning.

KEITHSBURG, ILL., June 3d, 1851.

Our town is flooded. Goods and household furniture on platforms and second floors. We share the fate of our neighbors.

From the Missouri Republican of the 6th inst., we glean the following:

The Mississippi opposite this City contin-ues to rise with considerable rapidity. Already the cellars on Front street have water in them to various depths, and the merchants have, for some days past, been actively engaged in removing their goods from them. Sugar, molasses, and articles requiring a cool atmosphere, being kept in the cellar, much injury has been sustained in the removal of them.

Since arranging the foregoing, two gentlemen have arrived from St. Louis, who have informed us that on the day they left, there were two feet of water on the first floors of several warehouses on the Levee, and the river still rising. The proprietors were busily engaged in removing their goods to other places for safety.

Kanesville and the surrounding country received its share of the flood, though no particular loss has been sustained, except that of Bridges, and the roads being considerably broken up. No houses have been carried away that we have heard of; neither loss of life, with the exception of a young man named Webster, who resided in String town, situated in this vicinity, who unfortunately was struck with lightning, which caused instant death. The circumstances connected with this case are as follows: The father and son were in the act of driving a cow into their yard to shield her from the storm, and while the father turned round to open the gate, he was struck by the electric fluid on the back of the neck, laying him prostrate on the ground; upon recovering from the shock he arose and looked in search of his son, whom he found lifeless a few paces from the place where he fell himself.

The thunder and lightning during that night exceeded anything we ever witnessed before, the wide expanse at times appeared to resemble a caldron of molten brass, incessantly pouring its burnished contents in streams, promiscuously toward the earth; threatening in aspect demolition and utter destruction of life and property; but through the kind providence of a beneficent Creator and wise Ruler, the storm subsided between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock, without any further material damage.

Storms and tornadoes like these, are only the fore runners of greater events, which the Saints of Latter-days have been publishing to the world for the last twenty-one years, although comparative FEW believe them.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Written on the Departure of the Company of Latter-Day Saints, from the Eastern States for the Great Salt Lake.

BY GEORGE SHIPLEY.

The time has come when we must sever,
From our friends so true and kind;
May Heaven's blessing dwell forever,
On the few we leave behind.
The standard's rear'd on yonder mountain,
Israel's blessings are at hand;
And the gospel's sacred fountain's
Streaming forth to ev'ry land.

The key of knowledge has been given,
And its power confer'd on men;
And the gracious truths of heaven,
Plainly now are taught again,
A voice is sounding through each nation,
"Come out of her, my people all,"
For distress, war and vexation,
On the wicked soon must fall.

The time is hastening when destruction,
With a mighty, sweeping hand,
Will do its work of devastation,
Spreading terror through the land;
Thrones and kingdoms now must tremble,
The decree has sounded forth,
And to dust they all must crumble;
Peace is taken from the earth.

We go to do our solemn duty,
Not for wealth, or ease, or gain,
Wherewith all its power and beauty,
Gospel light again doth reign.
This is the day of visitation;
The gospel banner is unfurled—
As an ensign to each nation—
Lo! it waves for all the world.

PREPARATION FOR WAR.—Mr. Wm. L. Yancey, the leading secessionist of Alabama, stated at the meeting of the Southern Rights Club of Montgomery, last week, that he had private advices from South Carolina, assuring him that the State would secede next spring, and a hundred pieces of old artillery, twenty thousand small arms, and military stores of all descriptions, to which accessions were constantly made.—[Missouri Republican.

The House line of telegraph, between Boston and New York, which was sold in Boston, recently, for $27,100, which was bid off by a Gentleman from Philadelphia, and was to go into the new hands on the 1st of June. The line belonged to a company, and cost between $60,000 and $70,000.

The small game and the snakes of all kinds have been driven from their hiding places by the high water, and wherever there is a dry spot to be found near their old haunts, large numbers of the latter varmints may be found. —[Burlington Hawk-Eye.

POETRY.

A Sacred Melody.

BY WILLIAM LEGGETT.

If you bright stars which gem the night
Be each a blissful dwelling sphere,
Where kindred spirits co-unite
Whom death has torn asunder here,
How sweet it were at once to die,
And leave this blighted orb afar—
Mixed soul with soul, to cleave the sky,
And soar away from star to star.

But oh! how dark, how drear, how lone,
Would seem the brightest world of bliss,
If, wandering through each radiant zone,
We failed to find the loved of this!
If there no more the ties should twine
Which death's cold hand alone can sever,
Ah! then these stars in mockery shine,
More hateful, as they shine forever!

It cannot be! each hope and fear
That lights the eye or clouds the brow
Proclaims there is a happier sphere
Than this bleak world that holds us now!
There is a voice which sorrow hears
When heaviest weighs life's galling chain;
'Tis heaven that whispers, "Dry thy tears;
The pure in heart shall live again!

MISCELLANY.

The Valley of the Geysers.

Prof. Forest Shepard, in a letter to the Evening Picayune of San Francisco gives the following graphic description of a remarkable valley discovered by him in the Coast Range, north of the Napa Valley. Another account says that Prof. S. intends to claim part of the valley, and plant tropical trees in the hot soil:

MESSRS. EDITORS: In answer to your inquiry respecting the Geyser Fountains on Pluton River, permit me to say that my attention was first arrested at the remarkably peaceful and quiet thermal springs in Napa Valley, by the wonderful metamorphism of the rocks. It occurred to me that the springs or the chemical action causing them might have been instrumental in producing this change. On diligent inquirey I learned that the Indians knew of a place where the heat was much greater formerly than now. I was led to believe this from the fact that the springs of Messrs. Ritchie & Tucker varied their temperature four or five degrees in the space of three weeks. I next visited the place indicated by the Indians, and found it perfectly tranquil externally, and nothing on the surface to attract special attention. But on digging down about two feet I found the heat increase rapidly, so I could not bear my hand in the earth. I inserted the bulb of my thermometer, and the mercury instantly rose to one hundred and twenty degrees of Fahrenheit.

From observations already made in company with prof. James Nooney, I was led to believe there existed a line of thermal action under the neighboring mountain chains, and accordingly in company with Mr. P. Cyrus, J. Cyrus, and B. F. Briggs, (most excellent companions and expert hunters,) I traveled north westerly in the line of thermal action, and after wandering through almost innumerable dense thickets, on the fourth day after leaving the head of Napa Valley we arrived at the immense chasm full 1,000 feet in depth, where had evidently been rent assunder by great violence. Here in the bottom of the valley we found a clear and beautiful River and its terraced banks covered with most luxurient vegetation and spring flowers on the 8th of February. This extraordinary appearance was soon explained, for on proceeding up the river, the earth grew warm under our feet, and as we emerged from a thicket of evergreen bordering a deep fissure in the mountain side, the secret workings of the inner world suddenly burst upon our astonished senses. You may judge my surprise, when I found myself not on the brink of a volcanic crater or salfatara, nor amid the salses of Humboldt, and yet the earth so hot as to burn my feet through the soles of my boots.

At no place was there any appearance of lava, but a powerful catalytic action going on affecting the dissolution of every kind of rock, the evolution of steam through innumerable orfices, and sometimes in columns rising like that from an ocean steamer, one or two hundred feet in height,—also the decomposition of sulphurated hydrogen gas, the sudden formation of boiling hot water—the deposision of beautiful crystals of sulphur and the formation of more or less sulphuric acid, and an astonishing amount of metalic oxides, mineral salts, and the cementation of brecciated and conglomerate rock. The scene leads the mind almost to bewilderment, and you tremble as you approach the Geysers, lest, like the lamented Pliny, you become a victim to your curiosity, especially when you find yourself sinking, as did the writer, into the abyss below, by breaking through the thin crust under your feet. The spouting Geysers, boiling maelstroms, springs of hot water, steam pipes, &c., probably exceed two hundred on a half mile square. The writer has commenced a series of experiments and improvements at the place, and has made arrangements to cut a road and erect a house on the premises, and in due time hopes to communicate to the public the results of his observations.

WASHINGTON, May 23.

The Republic of this morning published the seventh census of the United States complete, exhibiting also the apportionment of of Representatives in Congress. The total population is 23,257,498; representative population 21,832,625. The whole number of representatives is 231. The following States each have a member added to the apportionment: Alabama, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Massachusetts, Maryland, Missouri, New York, Pennesylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Texas.

PUNISHMENT COMMUTED—The President of the United States has commuted the punishment of the Indian, Se-so-sa-ma, who was sometime since convicted at Jefferson city of the murder of Norris Colburne, to imprisonment in the penitentiary during his natural life.

The Journeyman Printer.

Reader, did you ever reflect to what extent the world is indebted to this class of artists? Did you ever consider for a moment, how much you yourself are under obligations to the practitioners of the "art preservative of all arts," for those pleasures that refine the mind and purify the heart—and in how great a degree the profits of your business are enhanced by the labor of these intellectual "hewers of wood and drwaers of water!" But few, we presume, have ever thought of the matter.

In this country, the Newspaper has become a necessity—a coin in universal circulation. In the morning the first enquiry is for the Paper. Its contents are eagerly devoured, without a solitary reflection upon how many hours have been stolen from sleep by the Publishers, Editors, Reporters, Compositors, and Pressmen, in order that you may enjoy this luxury prior to business hours. How meagre too, is the compensation of all concerned—and Printers' bills are almost universally grudgingly paid!

In the Old World, things are managed differently, for the Publishers at least; and the Newspaper is indeed a luxury. The London Times, a daily paper, costs $45 a year. The same rate is charged respectfully, for the Morning Chronicle, Daily News, Globe, Herald, Post, and other London dailies; the London semi-weeklies are published at $16 50 per annum; and the weeklies rate at from $9 to $12. In France, the Journal des Debats, is $45 and Galignini's Messenger, $40 per annum. The National and La Presse, both published on smaller sheets than our two-penny papers, cost $25 and $20 per annum. The Irish and Scotch tri-weeklies are sold at $16 50 per annum; and the German dailies rate at from $20 to $25 a year Yet, even on these Papers, the Compositor receives but a moity—when the receipts of the offices would certainly oppear to justify a quid pro quo proportionate to his labor.

The mental labor of the Publisher and Editor of a Daily Morning Paper, is incalculably great—independent of the anxiety consequent upon the expense—which is immeasurably beyond the estimate of any one who has never tried the experiment. But the mental and physical labor of the Foreman and Compositors in Daily Morning Newspaper Offices, is beyond that of any class or profession who follow the injuncton of Holy Writ in the procurement of sustenance. The gally-slave, with his salaried overseer—the California Gold digger, with the constant fear that his arduous efforts will be without reward—the diver after pearls, with his unfeeling task-master—all enjoy their nigts of repose, and their Sabbaths of rest. But the Journeyman Printer enjoys neither. His hours in the office, are generally from sixteen to eighteen out of every twenty-four; and his Sunday's occupation is but a repitition of that of the previous week. Such confinement is destructive of any bouyant participation in the pleasures that others enjoy, and is of course ruinous to the constitution. For a few short years he delves for the benefit of mankind, and his sun of existence sets ere half the allotted span of life be run—

"A mental lamp hung out by life's wayside,
Unnoticed; yet his unpretending ray
Shines clearly on man's intellectual way,
And proves to pilgrims an unfailing guide.
He hath within a worthy sort of pride,
And knows his worth, though some allow it not:
A heart and thinking mind above his lot
'Mong men are his. His coffers ill supplied;
Yet want and virtue seldom ask in vain:
Nor is his life exempt from various pain:
Few days are his—the rose that feebly bloom'd
On boyhood's cheek, assumes the hue of death;
The oil of life within him soon consumed,
Ere two score years and ten he yields his vital breath."

A few evenings since we heard the misdeeds of the Printer most industriously commented upon by a fair and fashionable lady, who had just discovered a typographical error in a Novellette in process of publication in some paper. She was echoed by a number of ladies and gentlemen present, and the "mistake of the Printer" found but one apologist. The incident has led to this article, by way of a local item—which, if it has no other effect, we trust will superinduce the punctual payment of Printer's Bills.—[Union.

NEW ENGINE.—The New Orleans Courier has the following account of a new invention. "A steamboat to travel on land or water" would indeed be a novelty:

"A gentleman exhibited this morning in the Lyceum Hall, while the assembled multitude waited to be organized into convention, a model of a locomotive, which can be used for a steamboat, to travel on land or water—for ploughing, or for any sort of riding or traveling; it can also be used as a fire engine or a street sprinkler. He said it would throw water three hundred or three thousand feet high, according to the size of the machine constructed: and, if one had been in existence here at the time, the St. Charles fire could have been extinguished in five seconds after the invention got upon the ground. The inventor is one of the keenest, at the same time most gentlemanly looking chaps in town; and we believe he persuaded everybody that his invention was the greatest yet. The first engineers of the city have examined it, and pronounced that he has overcome every difficulty in the way of travelling on land by steam. He made the model move ahead, retograde, turn round and round every way, with grace and ease. It is, indeed, wonderful to behold.

A new revolver shirt has been produced in Europe, that, by turning round a little to the right or left, is made to display, in succession, the following round of fronts, viz.; 1—A colored front, pour la matinee. 2—A plain front, pour la promenade. 3—A dress front, pour l'opera or la bal. 4—A deshabile front, pour la nuit; thus admirably combining four shirts in one. Singularly adapted to the use of foreigners.

Winter wheat in Illinois and Iowa is generally poor. A traveller from Chicago to Iowa city, says that he did not see any good wheat until he got below Dixon, on Rock River. There is but little in Iowa and that not very good.

"I shall die like a hero," said the coal when it was being consumed, "for I shall mix with the ashes of the great!"

Sound Doctrine.

The following from the Liverpool Mail, discloses an important fact, and no person can deny that the new test of willingness of debtors to pay, is based upon common sense:

We were not aware that the books of newspaper publishers are consulted to quite a large extent by people in business, to ascertain the peculiar standing of persons. Debts for newspapers become due once a year; those who pay are considered as prompt men, and worthy of confidence. We had a person come into our office the other day, and ask—"Do you send the paper now to Mr.———?" We replied that we did—"Well," said the man, "he owes me £5, and I can't get it; I don't think he's good." We looked secretly at his account, and found him paid up. We then replied to the enquirer, "That man is good—your debt is safe. He may have forgotten it or something else may have prevented his paying, but he is good." The man's eyes brightened—Said he, "I have written to several printers, and could not find where he took a paper. I thought of you, and said I would come here," said he again, after a pause. This is the way to find out whether people are good. We ascertain what papers they take, contrive some way to peep into their accounts. Men who are good are sure to pay for their newspapers, and if they do not pay for these, we don't think them good. We were forcibly struck by the idea—"Well," said he, "I will send my bill by the post." In a few hays, the person came again. Said he, "I sent up my bill." "Well did he pay you?" "Yes, sir," and opening his hand he showed us the draft. "There," said he, "give me a printer's book after all, to tell whether a man's good, they're a complete thermometer; we always new a man to be bad if he don't pay the printer."

The Gold Mania.

The recent reports from the gold mountain and the Klamath mines have produced great excitement throughout the Willamette Valley. In the country bordering on the Willamette, companies are preparing to start as soon as the roads and condition of the streams render traveling easy and practicable. But quite a number, eager to get to the mines before the crowd shall have arrived, have taken time by the forelock and have started; some indeed, as long ago as four weeks. We have had no account of them since they left, but we presume their progress has been greatly retarded by the great rise in the streams, and the softness of the roads.

The people of this immediate neighborhood have been roused to an unusual excitement by the very flattering accounts given by Mr. Ingalls, who arrived here some two weeks since. The very large amount he is said to have procured whilst at the Klamath mines, has caused the Fever to rise to an unprecedented pitch. The intensity of the excitement may be judged of, when we state that the fever is likely to carry off professors even of the healing art, expounders of the law, clerks, mechanics of all kinds, and many of our industrious farmers. This class we are less able to spare than any of those we have mentioned. We have expostulated with our farmers time and again, as to the propriety of staying at home, and there prepare for an emergency that in all probability will arise about the time of gathering in the fall crop. We have advised this, not only because it would be of greater benefit to the Country, but because we were of opinion that it would be more certain, and the exposure and risk less; and would ultimately prove of more advantage in a pecuniary point of view.

Answer to Rebus in our Last.

BY G. D. W.

Your first, the boundless Ocean wide;
Your second a horse, the Indian's pride;
Your whole a SEA-HORSE seldom seen,
Which solves your rebus, right I ween.
Your 4, 5, 1, 8, a scotchman's hose,
Your 6, 5, 7, 2, an English rose,
Your 7, 2, 8, 6, will name a seer,
And your 2, 3, 6 the human ear;
Your 4, 5, 2, a gardener's hoe,
Use it well, your gardens sure to grow,
Your 7, 4, 5, 6, 2, the sea-shore,
Your 1, 5, 6, 8, a painful sore;
Your 3, 1, 7, a slave to his glass,
A poor, silly, simple, drunken ass.

ANSWER BY CHARLIE.

Your first at once I conceive to be,
No other than the boundless sea;
Your second, that living thing,
A creature useful, strong,
That sometimes wealth and honor brings,
I'll call a horse, am I right or wrong?
Combine these two SEA HORSE, I mean,
And you have the monster rarely seen.

Rebus by W. W. M.

I now will rejoin with another rebus,
A thing in its season which makes a great fuss.
Its first three letters a name you will find,
An animal useful to most of mankind.
Reverse these three letters a name you will spell,
Of whom, his acquaintance always speak well.
Four letters affixed will name this great thing,
And these four letters to earth light will bring,
Reverse these four letters a name you will spell,
An animal hoard, of which no one speaks well.
This thing of seven letters has one other name.
Its first three are prefixed to males of great fame,
Its fourth is a useful great letter you'll find,
In the English language to each of mankind,
Two letters more will complete this rebus,
And these two letter's can't be found without us.
Now Amicus tell us this first name, or last,
If you cannot I'll answer when two weeks are past.

Storage, Forwarding, and Commission Business,

At Kanesville, Iowa, by

ORSON HYDE,—Editor of this paper.

IT is our design to enter into the above business, and having already made partial arrangements for receiving and forwarding heavy stocks of goods, wares and merchandize hence, to the Valley of the Salt Lake in the Spring, he flatters himself that his position and facilities will enable him to give general satisfaction, and thereby secure a liberal patronage.

He will receive in store all kinds of goods from the East, West, North or South; also shipments of produce by boat or wagon, and sell the same on commission if desired. Groceries received and sold on commission at wholesale only. Liberal cash advances made on all property left in charge. Flour, Bacon, &c., &c.

Church of ninety members, established by Elder Dykes in Jutland.

An account of Elder George P. Dykes' Travels, Discussions, Persecutions, and Success, in preaching the gospel in Aalborg, the Metropolis of Jutland, a province of Denmark.

HOLSTEIN HAUS, SCHLESWIG, May 4, 1851.

DEAR BROTHER FRANKLIN,—While the fleeting moments are swiftly passing, permit me to give you a short history of the times with me since we parted last June in London. The first of which you are acquainted with, as we proceeded directly to Copenhagen, and there I spent my time in laboring, together with the two other brethren, till the 8th of October, 1850, in which time we had begun a good work, and baptized about forty, when under the counsel and direction of President Snow, I took steamer for Aalborg, about 140 English miles to the northward, where I landed on the 10th, and being short of means, I had to seek lodgings in a very retired place, which, indeed, was poor and exceeding filthy, yet the Lord gave me grace and patience to bear all these things without the least spirit of murmuring, and comforted me with dreams and manifestations of the Holy Spirit, which enabled me to see forward to a better day, for all of which I thank and praise His holy name; but under these gloomy circumstances, I began in faith to lift my warning voice to a very superstitious people, and soon I had enough to do, for the spirit that had for ages lulled the priests and people to sleep under their ancient customs and dead ceremonies was now awakened, and arose like an old lion from his slumbers, and came forth in the powers of darkness, which caused a trembling in the land, such as has not been known for generations past; the people were astonished, their sleep was disturbed by night, and their labors by day; there was something new in the land; it was a voice from on high—a message from that God whom they or their fathers had not known. He that speaks from the heavens, and gives revelations to man on the earth. He it was that had sent his angel to his servant Joseph, the prophet, with the fulness of the everlasting gospel, to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people; and now it had come to them, and something must be done. The Baptists who were there, together with the Swedenborgians, soon learned it was better for them to stand afar off, but this would not do for the Established Church, so I was met by one of their most learned priests, who had travelled much, and had been a missionary in Smyrna, but after the second day they found that fighting against the truth with their weapons, was like small arms against the towers of Gibraltar, so they must have recourse to other means, which they did, and the mob spirit arose, and they surrounded the house where I was, and broke in the windows, and a part of the roof, and raged like devouring wolves that had smelled the blood of a lamb, but the Holy One of Zion delivered me from their hands, and I came off unhurt; and having failed in their unhallowed designs, I was sent for to appear before his excellency the Mayor; but after many questions, all of which I was enabled to answer according to law, (for I had made myself somewhat acquainted with law), so that they could find no cause of action against me, but notwithstanding all this, he, (the Mayor) contrary to law, forbid me holding any more meetings, except alone for those who had acknowledged a belief in my religion, until he could send to the king's minister in Copenhagen, concerning these things, which I was quite willing he should do, as I had in person visited the minister before leaving there, and conversed with him on those points. But now the house that I had rented for meetings must lay comparatively idle for some time (which after proved to be over three months), I was now brought under the necessity of visiting in private from house to house and from village to village, to teach the people the way of life and salvation, and thus many times being out till late, has the midnight hour found me wandering over the snowy hill of Jylland (Yulland), but in the midst of all this opposition, the work moved on, and spread on the right hand and on the left, and calls by letters and messengers for visits were increased, so that I could not fill them all. In the meantime the Baptists had written to Copenhagen for the presiding Elder there, to come and help them, as their church was in danger of being broken up; he having before written to them to follow me from house to house, and show the people the erroneousness of my doctrine; so he came, and we met in private, and after a few hours conversation he became so uneasy that he could not stay longer, but appointed a day to meet me with Foltved the Baptist, presiding elder of Aalborg, and accordingly we met at one of his old friends, but a comfortable sofa was soon an unpleasant seat for him, so he left in a rage, and now the main point with him was to see that we met not again, and it was interesting to the Saints to see how careful he was not to follow the advice he had given to others; but after this I was one day sitting with one of his old friends whom I had now baptized, and he passing by called in, as the weather was very unfavorable, and seated himself by the stove in the front room, so I came with the bible, and took a seat by the side of him, when he got up immediately and went out, not a little to the surprise and amusement of the family to see their former pastor retreat in a storm, and this was the last I saw of Mr. Rotter, the Baptist Forstander, although he was about there for near three months after.

But when they could do nothing against the truth, with the bible argument, history, or even the wisdom of this world, (their vain philosophy), the priests began to contend with each other, and to publish articles in the papers, accusing each other of bad management towards me, and to write against the unlawful course of the mayor for stopping my public meeting, as I had now in private filled the land with my doctrine, and they (as they now said) had not the opportunity of exposing it before the public, while the people were asking, the priests through the papers, if those things which I had said in my tracts were so; one great question with them was,—has the Church of Christ continued from the Apostles days, or was it again organized in 1830? for I had proven from scripture that it was again organized in that year; but it was not answered when I left, nor are there priests enough in Denmark to prove the negative from the bible.

The Baptists now sent to Hamburgh for Mr. Kobner, one of their head men, to come with all possible speed, as it would be the only means of saving their church, for they had done all they could, and even passed a law that any member of their church who should be known to go twice to our meeting, or twice converse with any of the Saints, should be cut off from their Church, but still they would occasionally hear and then believe the truth, till their church in Aalborg was principally broken up.

In the meantime Kobner came with those old American lies, of Kidder, Bennett; Bows, of England, &c., and thus armed with the weapons of his master, he met me first in private, and for the first two hours I could not bring him to the Scriptures, till at last I read 2nd Timothy iv, verses 1 to 4, and showed him wherein he was now fulfilling Paul's prophecy, which brought him a little to a pause, and soon we adjourned, as he had given out word to a few that he would meet me that night in my room, so we met with some of the Saints and some of the Baptists, including their leading members there. We spoke 15 minutes each alternately till about eleven, when they were confused and the meeting broke up, the result of which was next day (Saturday,) two came forward and were baptized; Sunday he spent the most of the day in reading, translating, and explaining Bennett's history of the Saints, &c., which in itself is so unreasonable that many of his members that had come in from the country to hear him, were so disgusted, that in the afternoon they were seen about the the streets conversing with each other on the question of, "whether it was a sin or not for them to go up there and hear the Holy Sabbath profaned with such things as had been read there in the forenoon." Kobner finding that the old lies newly translated did not take so well with the people as he expected, (in particular when read in the church on the Sabbath,) the old leading men met and decided that Kobner should meet me on Tuesday night, in their meeting-house, and accordingly they addressed me a line in the afternoon of the same day of the meeting, without stating the question or the nature of the meeting; but I had learned it from another source, so that when the appointed hour came, I was prepared for them, and they had also given out that a few of the Saints and a few of the Baptists might attend; there were, however, some strangers come in, and they thought they were Saints, and we we thought they were Baptists, till the meeting's close, and thus, much to our satisfaction and their disapointment, were there strangers who had come to hear the truth.

All things being now ready, Kobner arose, and demanded in a tone of authority for me to prove "that there was in the apostolic church a priesthood, or individual members chosen to officiate in the priest's office, as Joe Smith had organized in the Mormon sect," which, as you well understand, was a light thing for me to do; not only that it was so in those days, but after the falling away it should be restored again to the earth before our Savior's second coming. The meeting continued till about eleven, when Kobner arose and asked me how long I wished to hold the meeting; to which I replied as long as you will; I stand here a living witness of the Eternal truths of Heaven, as revealed in these last days, and am at your service to continue here from day to day as long as you please; to which he replied, that he looked upon me as an unconverted man, it was not worth their while to spend their time with me: so the meeting broke up; and the next day at night there were three who came forward for baptism. One thing occurred worthy of notice in the discussion. I had about two months before published 1000 copies of scriptural references, to prove the the great work of the Lord in the last days, and they were now thickly circulating among the people, to which the Baptists and Swenenborgians jointly had replied, and ordered one thousand copies to be printed, two hundred of which were struck off and put in circulation among the people; one had fallen into my hands, and during the discussion I used it to great advantage. Kobner at first denied its being a Baptist production, or their having any hand in it, but I showed him Foltved's name in the first page; standing in bold relief, and asked him whose name that was, and if he could receive the teachings of their own presiding elder, as Baptist doctrine, which caused confusion among them, for he turned upon Foltved and gave him a severe rebuke for his unwise course. The next day Foltved was round to call in all he could that were in circulation, and made a request to his brethern and friends to help him, and burn all they could find, and he went to the printer's and secured the remainder, which were all burnt, as I was informed by good authority; and now when the Baptists say to the Saints there is to be no more priesthood, the Saints say to them that they, the Baptists, have not only a priesthood, but offer whole burnt offerings. The next thing of note that occurred was an article in the papers, stating that "Kobner would expose the wicked design of Mormonism for three successive evenings, in Drammatikken, by reading and explaining their early history in North America," &c. &c The first evening it was attended by the principal men in the city, and the other two evenings there was quite a falling off; in the meantime, the minister from Copenhagen had written to the mayor to give me liberty to hold my meetings according to the late laws of Frederick the 7th, which he did, and wrote me a letter to that effect, and while Kobner was lecturing in Drammatikken, I put an article in the papers, stating that now I had liberty to hold public meetings again; after which, we had good attendance as long as I remained there. But many of the Baptists began now to say, that because I did not meet Kobner in Drammatikken, I dare not, and I was afraid to have my doctrine exposed; to which I replied publicly by putting an article in the papers, stating that if Kobner would meet me in a respectable place for such meeting, I would prove to him and every other that would attend, that our doctrine was in strict accordance with the Holy Scriptures, and that the Baptist church was not the church of Christ; and while the whole country was now waiting for a reply from Kobner, the next we saw of him was his name as a passenger for Hamburgh. This is a short history of my labors in Jylland where I remained for six months and three days, during which time the Lord enabled me to establish a church there, consisting of one elder, three teachers, one deacon, ninety-one baptized, and two cut off. I also had published 1000 tracts, including our faith, which I circulated gratis, 1000 scriptural references, and 300 chronicle tables, showing the age of the world in which we live, and proving that our Savior's second coming is near. I also circulated 200 tracts, that brother Snow sent me from Copenhagen, thus have I spent a busy winter, while the goodness of the Lord has been round about me, and his Spirit has not forsaken me, for it is HE that has done the work, for no no mortal man alone could do it, and I feel to humble myself in the dust, and offer thanksgiving, and praise, and adoration to his holy name for ever and ever, for his great goodness in sparing my life, and giving his Spirit to the humble, and confirming the testimony of his unworthy servant with signs following the believers. Having bid farewell to the beloved Saints in Aalborg, I travelled 170 (English) miles, and am now in Schleswig city, among the Dutch, but times are precarious here, no one is allowed to pass the streets after nine, p. m., without a written pass from the commanding general; but if brother Snow does not give further directions or appoint me another field of labor, I feel a great desire still, as I have for years past, to search among this people for the lost sheep of the house of Israel, for here are thousands of Judah, and tens of thousands of Ephraim. The brethren in Copenhagen are doing a good work, under the wise and deliberate counsels of brother Snow, but his time is principally occupied in publishing the book of Mormon, which prevents him from laboring much among the people; he is a man of God, a man of faith, and the work in Denmark prospers under his presidency: but now I close by praying for the blessing of the Lord God of the Holy Prophet Joseph to rest upon you, and all the Zion of the sons of Ahman, together with the Israel of God in all the world, in the name of Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

Your fellow-laborer in the new covenant,
G. PARKER DYKES.

Halt Not on Your Way.

BY JOE BARNES.

Ho! ye who start a noble scheme,
For general good designed,
Ye workers in a cause that tends
To benefit your kind!
Make out the path you fain would tread,
The game ye mean to play;
And if it be an honest one,
Keep steadfast on your way!

Although ye may not gain at once
The points ye most desire,
Be patient—time can wonders work,
Plod on, and do not tire;
Obstructions, too, may crowd your path,
In threatening, stern array.
Yet flinch not! fear not! they may prove
Mere shadows in your way.

Then while there's work for you to do,
Stand not despairing by,
Let "forward" be the move ye make,
Let "onward" be the cry;
And when success has crowned your plans
'T will all your pains repay,
To see the good your labor's done—
Then droop not on your way.

Value of Reputation.

To obtain success, usually requires no inconsiderable effort of wisdom, nor can such efforts well proceed from other dictates than those of the purest integrity of purpose; for, despite the censures and cavils of the jealous and unworthy, the world presents to us at the present day a pleasing aspect in this particular. In its commerce the value of reputation is above all price or estimate. The world's good report is as precious a capital as can be invested in its business; and he alone is wise who merits this repute, since the experience of recent times almost universally demonutrates that it cannot otherwise be secured. The instances of the success of bad men are few, and wealth in these instances, but demonstrates to us the truth that when it is unworthily obtained it fails to afford the gratifications for which it is sought.

The necessary connection, then, between good motives and means, and successful results, in the persuit of wealth, must be impressed upon the mind of every man who hopes to attain to success, to prove useful or honorable to his family or friends, or to the community of which he is a member.

KANESVILLE, IOWA, June 25, 1851.

FRIEND GUARDIAN:—At a Complimentary Party in honor of the Hon. Judge Brocchus, one of the Associate Justices of Utah; and also as a mark of esteem towards our worthy Townsman and Citizen Orson Hyde, who is about to accompany him to the far famed and pleasant vale of Utah: also to show our esteem and friendship towards Professor Carrington, belonging to the Topographical Corps, sent by Government to Utah. Amicus was as usual present, and being very much pleased and highly delighted, with the goodly array of beauty, intelligence, and good humor of the company; and also with the rich, varied, and sumptuous display of choice and costly viands. I cannot refrain from expressing the same in a more than wordy manner.

After exercising in the giddy maze and whirl of the dance, and tipping of the light fantastic toe, the company adjourned to the upper room of the Hall, where a rich and sumptuous repast was spread, with a good relish each seemed to play their part to perfection; and when the sparkling and exhilarating wine came round, some spirited and appropriate toasts were offered, which were responded to with much applause.

The first by AMICUS.

Justice, Peace and Truth.—May they walk hand in hand with the people, the *Judge and his associate, whilst they sojourn in Utah's fair Vales.

The response from the Judge was a charming combination of that soul-stirring eloquence that charms and enchains the senses; wit that enlivens, and humor that moves the passions, and is the pith of enjoyment to a company like the one present. After entertaining the company in a very agreeable manner for near an hour, he closed by drinking the following toast.

The Good People of Kanesville.—Their harmony as Brethren is equalled only by their hospitality to strangers.

Hon. Judge Brocchus.—
Oh may his generous intellectual mind,
Soar to the highest stations of mankind;
And may the howling tempests only moan,
To haste him forward to the Saint's dear home.
M. L. B.

Many other spirited, witty, appropriate and agreeable toasts and responses were listened to by the company with much attention and pleasure. After a very pleasant and agreeable sitting of two or more hours, the company again adjourned to the dizzy waltz, which continued to a late hour, when it seperated all well pleased with the entertainment and with the best of feelings each towards each.

A greater display of beauty, gracefulness, intellect, humor, and of choice viands and goodly fare, is seldom seen in Kanesville. Much credit is due the managers, and especially Messrs. Benson, McIntosh and Bassett, for the order and neatness of arrangements, and for their attentiveness to the comfort of the Guests.

The refreshments and confectionaries from the Emporium Saloon, accompanied by the cooling and soothing influence of Ice Water prepared for the occasion, is hard to beat, neither was it bad to take.

In haste, Yours, &c.
AMICUS.

* Honorable Judge Brocchus.

From the Deseret News.

Murder, Hanging, &c.

November 23d, 1849, Professor John W. Webster murdered Dr. George Parkman, at Boston, Massachusetts, in a room of, or connected with, the Medical College, as has since appeared on trial, and by Webster's confession. The parties were both of high standing, and the murder and trial have created great excitement through the eastern country. In the Boston Journal of Sept. 11th, 1850, we find an account of the execution of Professor Webster, on or about the 6th of the same month. AN EASY DEATH IS REPORTED BY A BROKEN NECK, after the Rev. "Dr. Putman, standing in the door of the cell, had addressed the throne of grace, in a brief and impressive manner, invoking God's Holy Spirit to accept the repentance of the fellow being who was about to be sent into His presence, and beseeching that it might be sincere. He also prayed that the hope of forgiveness which the prisoner had been permitted to entertain, might be realized, and concluded his prayer by committing the prisoner to Almighty God, and beseeching that he might be numbered with the redeemed of the Lord."

While reading the above, we recollect it is written in the Saint's Bible, that the Savior taught his followers to pray to his "FATHER in the NAME of JESUS;" and not to GOD'S HOLY SPIRIT: also that "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Query: how can a man be "numbered with the redeemed of the Lord," who has not eternal life abiding in him?"

To conclude this subject, we give the following quotation from the recent address of the Secretary of State, before the General Assembly of the State of Deseret, on constitutional law.

So long as money alone shall remain the great, grand, governing principle, and main spring to action in popular education: "So long the education of man will be made a lucrative trade as much as the priest and the hatter, the lawyer and the tailor, the doctor, butcher, and king's jester; and the mass of people must remain in ignorance, and learn only to be rode just as the few learned have a mind to ride them; and quietly be imprisoned and hanged when the judges and priests have a mind to hang them.

But what have priests to do with hanging? Perhaps nothing directly; only to hear the culprit say his prayers, or try to pray out of existence an unpardonable sin. The profession of hangman is not very congenial to their feelings, but indirectly they may justly be held responsible. They have set themselves up as teachers of the laws of God, and the Gospel; and if they have not taught the doctrine of the halter, when they have seen the nation hanging their culprits, strangling them with their blood in them, they have not stepped forward as the dignity and nature of their office required, and taught their rules better; and when men professing to be teachers of righteousness, see their neighbors doing wrong ignorantly, and they neglect to warn them, the wrong rests upon the head of those who thus neglect; and the priests of the United States, and Christendom generally, having neglected their duty in this thing, the blood of all men who have been hanged in those nations, by legal authority, may justly be required at the hands of their priests.

What saith the great law Book on this subject? When Cain killed his brother, we have no account that any law had been given against murder; but his sentence was to be a fugitive and vagabond in the midst of the earth, as a warning to others, and a mark was set upon him, by the lawgiver himself, lest any one should slay him. In process of time the law came:—"Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." And the reason is given; because that in the blood is the life of the flesh. The mere act of designedly killing an innocent man, is the same to him, whether it be done by poison, strangling, or the sword; it is murder, and is punishable with death; and that punishment should be the letting out of the murderer's blood upon the earth, that the smoke thereof may ascend towards heaven, as the only offering the great Lawgiver would accept in any degree, towards opening up the way for remission of the crime; and eternity must unfold how far even that may tend to its intended effect.

Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. In the whole Jewish economy there was nothing strangled permitted to be used, either as food, or for sacrifice; it was an abomination. If Jesus had been strangled, hanged, or poisoned, so that his blood had remained in him, his death would have brought forth no attonement for the sins of the world,—he himself might have been saved, because he was holy, and needed no atonement; but if his blood had not been shed, he would not have become a Savior to others; and it is just as necessary, that the blood of the murderer should be shed, to bring about his salvation, as it was that the Savior's blood should be shed to bring about the salvation of the world; and the priests who have not taught this doctrine, when they have seen the people strangling their fellow beings, are responsible; (at this instant Gov. Young exclaimed, "perhaps they are ignorant, and know no better;" when the speaker resumed:) and should they plead the excuse of ignorance themselves, a double curse will rest upon them for pretending to the most exalted profession, when they were ignorant of its duties, not having been called of God as was Aaron. Let such priests beware, when they are called to account for blood, and they begin to cry aloud for help, lest their Gods be found in the dark dilemma with the strangled victims of their ignorance; or, like the Gods of Baal's prophets, so sound asleep they cannot wake them. The Infidel Guillotine of France, is far more Christian-like, than the Christians halter."

Mental Culture.

Of all the works of creation, the human mind may be considered the noblest. Like all else created it is capable of cultivation, and perhaps to a greater degree than any other of the works of nature. Just in the degree that the mind is cultivated and rendered pure, is man fitted for great action, and high enjoyment. Man's great concern on earth, is to educate and strengthen the mind and through it the heart. A great truth which the mass have yet to learn. It is wonderful that mortals endowed with such noble qualities and capable of the highest intellectual attainments, should slumber on through a world like ours, which contains everything beautiful, lovely and sublime, to awaken and call forth their energies; a world which opens a scene of the richest variety to the eye, the mind, the heart, so diversified that we may never grow weary in contemplating it. If you wish to live in the true sense of the term, cultivate the mind, enlarge its capacities and give vent to pure and noble feelings. Let the purest sentiments of virtue arise and endow us with the noblest worth. Each of our minds is but a portion as it were of one vast machine, in which each piece has a part to perform, capable of the highest, noblest action, capable of being expanded and elevated in a degree almost illimitable. Every cultivated mind turned out into the world exerts a powerful influence either for good or evil.

Here we see the need of right education; such as will render the mind capable of exerting a happy influence on the community and raise it to a just perception of its duties both moral and rational. Its influence will be felt in future generations. What then is our duty in reference to that influence. It is very evident it is to use all the means in our power without stint, grudge, or prejudice, to acquire that mental culture which will make us instruments of the greatest good; that which will enable us to unlock the door of science, and leave an example worthy of imitation. May the time speedily come when all classes of persons shall be educated to a greater extent than now; when there shall be more equality, and crimes in all their forms may be checked: when religion, justice and humanity, shall govern the people, and ignorance be forever blotted from the face of the earth. An overruling desire for wealth narrows the mental vision, deprives the mind of its capacity for expansion; deadens the finer sensibilities, and chains the whole immortal to a few petty atoms of the dust. In a country like ours, where merit gives the preference,—where talent rises superior to riches. the cultivated minds elevate themselves over the ignorant cotemporaries, and perhaps unconsciously sway the minds and control the actions of all around them. This should furnish a new incentive to renewed exertions. It should stir up the inmost soul, awaken feelings of self-respect and throw a ray of light over them that should continue to glow brighter and brighter till the summons for our departure comes.

The cause of mental culture becomes the cause of humanity. Mind sways the destinies of nations. Its cultivation enlarges the powers of reason and judgement, and raises men to honor and distinction. Though its onward progress be silent and imperceptible, it is nevertheless rapid and powerful, and when guided by moral principle and skill, demolishes the stronghold of ignorance and superstition. Consult the pages of history:—draw out its truth, and you cannot find a name cherished for its noble worth, that belonged not to a cultivated mind. A person having no heart beating in common with those of his fellow man; no feeling on which self is not the beginning and the end, may truly be said not to live. May right mental culture never cease till it shall fill the earth with its wonderful fruits, and show to man his capacity for mental improvment, and finally raise the people of this common country, to the true condition they ought to occupy. If you have any regard for the well being of posterity, apply yourselves with redoubled energy, and an unyielding determination never to cease your exertions, till this end be secured. Let us act as those who know there rights, and who their duties know, and knowing dare perform.

The Next Presidency.

The Whig Press of the West, with extraordinary unanimity, is speaking outein favor of Milliard Fillmore as its standard bearer in the next contest. In this State, we think there will scarcely be any difference of opinion amongst Whigs. The Oceola Independent, the Palmyra Whig, the Louisiana Record, and, we believe, other Whig journals, have already declared their preference for Mr. Fillmore. Thus far, no Whig paper in Missouri has intimated a preference for any one else over Mr. Fillmore. Our firm conviction is, that the Whig party of this State, is not only entirely content with Mr. Fillmore's administration, but it cherishes an enthusiastic respect for him as a Statesman and a man. He has the unbounded confidence of his party in this latitude, and if he should be selected as the Whig candidate for the Presidency, he will receive not only the unanimous vote, but the zealous and cordial support of the Whigs of Missouri. They desire no better Whig, no more inflexible patriot, no firmer friend of the Union, no more discreet, intelligent, conservative Statesman, than Millard Fillmore. Nevertheless they will submit not only willingly, but most cheerfully, to the action of a national Convention. There are many other distinguished and patriotic Whigs, entitled to the respect, the confidence and the cordial support of the party. If one of these,—if Clay, Scott, Webster, Crittenden, or any other sound Union Whig should be selected, he will receive the willing and hearty support of the Whigs of Missouri.

These, at least, are our views of the state of Whig feeling in this latitude, and we give them only as our speculation on the subject. But we think we have not misinterpreted the signs of the times, which point to Mr. Fillmore as the choice of the Whigs of Missouri.—[Intelligencer

OFFICIAL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
PENSION OFFICE, 26th May, 1851.

In all applications for the reissue of land bounty warrants granted under the act of September 28th, 1850, in lieu of the originals which may have been lost or destroyed, the following regulations, approved by the Department of the Interior, will be observed:

When a warrant has failed to reach the hands of the party entitled to receive it, and to whom it was sent, or has been lost after being received, the party should at once enter a caveat in the General Land Office, to prevent the issuing of a patent to a fraudulent claimant, and should give public notice of the facts in the case at least once a week for six successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation at, or nearest the place to which the warrant was directed, or where the loss occurred. In such publication the intention shall also be expressed to apply to the Commissioner of Pensions, for a duplicate of such warrant, which, of course, should be minutely described, in order to guard against the improper use of the one first issued.

The identity of the applicant must be satisfactorily established and the facts upon which the application for the re-issue is based must be fully and clearly set forth under oath, the warrantee stating in his affidavit (if such be the fact) that he has never himself located, nor empowered any person to locate for him, the warrant in question.

In cases where the claim for a duplicate is founded upon the non-reception of the original, the agent, if there be one, is required to unite with the warrantee in the application for renewal.

It is requisite that the credibility of each and every affiant be duly certified by the magistrate administering the oath, and that his official character and signature be verified by the proper officer under his seal of office.

J. E. HEATH,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Mails to this place have been very irregular for the last two months; therefore our paper may not arrive in due season to suit subscribers. In our own defence we would here say, that our issue has not varied an hour either way from the commencement of the paper, up to the present.

Summary of News, &c.

President Orson Hyde, Editor of this paper, left Kanesville on Saturday, 28th ult., at 11 o'clock forenoon, for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, in good health and spirits, and is expected to return in the month of October next. In connection with two of his most intimate friends we accompanied him to Ferryville; at which place we left him about seven o'clock in the afternoon ready to cross the river that evening; and since our return, we learn that he crossed that night, and encamped with Mr. Ormus Bates six miles out from the River on the Indian lands.

Hon. P. E. Brocchus, of Alabama, one of the Associate Judges of the Supreme Court of Utah, left this place on Sunday morning 29th ult.; also Albert Carrington Esq., late from Washington City, accompanied by a goodly number of the citizens of this town with a splendid Spring Carriage, four horses in hand, driven by H. W. Miller, the Old Pioneer of the West.

The Judge and Mr. Carrington were detained longer than they anticipated, in consequence of some little repairs that had to be made, previous to their departure, but they expected to overtake Elder Hyde and share of his company over the plains, and the mountains. The company of citizens who went out with the Judge as an escort, prosecuted their journey as far as the six mile camp, on the other side of the Missouri river; and being unable to overtake the Elder and his company, they returned; while the Judge, Mr. Carrington, and others in their company proceeded on, to overtake Mr. Hyde, who was at the least calculation thirteen miles ahead of them.

Our latest accounts from the plains are favorable; grass is good, and plenty of it, and a superabundance of water. The health of the Saints is good, and as far as we have learned, peace prevails among them all, and we trust that no discordant feeling may prevail to any extent among those who are left in Pottawatamie. The Union and Virtue of the Saints, through the wisdom of our all-wise God, has ever been their bulwark of protection against their invaders; and our President who is now on his way to the Valley to visit his friends and brethren there, very clearly exemplified at the last general Conference held in the Grove, the character of those who might expect, Health, Prosperity and Salvation, this season in this county. While we are taking a miniature view of matters and things, we would also advance his statements on that occasion for the benefit of both saints and sinners, so that all may have a chance to have their eye on the mark, and pursue their course with a steady aim. "After a lengthy discourse on tithing, he referred to the Revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants on the subject; and promised peace, health, and prosperity to those who remained, inasmuch as they did their duty, and what the law of the Lord required, and abstain from murmuring and ingratitude."

The half-breed Indians who keep the Ferry on the Loupe Fork say: that they have no intention of participating in any depredations, or hostile movements, entered into, or carried on, by the Omaha, or other Indians this season; and they feel as though they should not be branded on every occasion, that an unwise step is taken by the red skins to destroy cattle, &c.

Well, Messrs. Halfbreeds, confirm the truth of your statements, by corresponding actions in future, and we will readily move forward to aid you in removing any prejudices that should exist, to have a tendency to crush your influence when you are innocent; still we are strongly of the opinion, if the white man, and his evil insinuations was kept at a greater distance from the Indians; matters could be got along with, on both sides a little easier and better. But as long, as reckless scamps, who have not as much honor left as a dog, are suffered to traverse the Indian country; and traffic with them without license, or any regard for the public good, things, in our estimation cannot materially change, unless the Government station troops somewhere on the Frontier to keep the Indians at bay, and clear the Indian country of such scape graces as before mentioned.

We cannot pass unnoticed, the willingness of the Commandant at Fort Leavenworth, to comply with the requisition of the citizens of this place, by giving orders for a force to move on to the Frontier, and help to protect the emigrants on their journey from Indian depredations; and although such force is not now needed,—the Indians having abandoned their hostile intentions, we cannot forget the timely, and prompt assent of that gentlemanly Officer to assist.

During the Editor's absence, we crave the indulgence of our readers, for any lack of matter or talent on our part; and though we have not had the qualifications, and experience, so manifestly displayed by him who is gone, and so clearly illustrated in his character, and public course; still we cherish a hope to be able to a certain extent to give our patrons the paper in as good a style as the nature of circumstances will allow us, and we only ask in return, that response which our labors merit.

The Guardian, while under our management and direction, shall, as heretofore, pursue an independent and untrammeled course; its columns shall be open to embrace every good, virtuous, God-like or interesting principle, that may come within our reach, which we think may be of interest and benefit to our subscribers; at the same time, when duty call us to defend right, and depricate wrong, we shall endeavor to launch forward unrestrained by fear, and unbiased by favor, leaving the issue to him whose business it is, to provide for all his Saints, and make all things work together for their good.

St. Louis Wagons.

The class of wagons that came from St. Louis this Spring, we pronounce unfit to cross the plains with, without a great deal of inconvenience, expense and damage to those who brought them. When we advance these statements we say they are true, and hundreds of our brethren, who are now between this place and Allred's camp on the other side of the Missouri River, will bear witness to the same thing. Not less than twenty, did we see ourselves of this kind of trash broke down, within six or seven miles of this town, and through them, the owners almost discouraged to proceed any farther on their journey. The question might be asked what is the reason? The most effectual reason we can assign, is, that St. Louis wagons are made to sell, and the maker cares not, if he has got his money, how far they go before they break. We want wagons to cross the plains with, that will carry us safe through, without all this extra trouble, which is but seldom or ever calculated on by our emigrants; therefore we advise our friends and brethren to purchase their wagons at Kanesville hereafter; by so doing they may calculate on having a wagon that they can depend upon, and which will give them but very little trouble in the shape of repairs on their journey. We have wagon makers here, that will do the work as it should be done; also the right kind of timber, and we are told that arrangements are about to be entered into this Summer, on a large scale in this kind of business, so as to meet the requirements of next Spring's emigration. Our friends, and brethren abroad will please note this, and send on their orders this Fall, with a description of the kind of wagons wanted, &c., so as to give sufficient time for our Mechanics to take right hold and go ahead with them, and have them ready whenever they may be wanted. Our remarks on the foregoing subject emanate not, from selfish motives for aggrandisement, but solely from a conviction of the fact, that if this arrangement is carried out, a great deal of unnecessary trouble and expense may be avoided. Our policy is to live, and let live; but when we find that other people's work does not suit us, we turn in and give it a trial ourselves. The Mechanics in St. Louis may execute their work in first rate order for that City, and the surrounding country; but when it comes to making wagons to go through mud-holes, sloughs, &c., it requires a workman that is acquainted with all these circumstances, and knows how to put the extras on for safety and despatch.

Tri-Weekly Hawk-Eye.

This excellent little sheet came to us by last Mail, to eulogize upon the merits of it, we deem superfluous; because the Editor is too well known, to require anything in the shape of a puff.

All thy works praise thee Mr. Hawk,—onward and prosper, you have our best wishes.

Information Wanted.

Mrs. Eliza Spinnings, a Widow Lady, living in Keokuk, Iowa, wishes to be informed of Mr. Joel R. Hough's,—whereabouts. Whoever knows this gentleman, and where he is at present, would confer a favor on the Old Lady, by addressing a note to that effect, to Mr. Joseph T. Pendleton, Postmaster, St. Francis, or Council Bluffs, Iowa, at the earliest opportunity.

The Good Man.

The Good man contributes to the welfare of others, as well as that of his own; not alone by positive act and instruction, but his life resembles a fruit-bearing shade tree, by which each passer by find shelter and refreshment, which disinterestedly and even involuntarily scatters happy germs upon the surrounding soil, whereby it produces what is LIKE and similar to itself.

Why cannot each of our friends and brethren, in this and surrounding counties; also the Saints who are in a scattered condition throughout the United States and Canada, take hold of the Guardian and become individually interested, and like the good man scatter its pages to their relations, friends and neighbors?

We are confident a similar effect would ensue, as that produced in the figure of the good man; and a responsibility rests upon every Saint to help in rolling on the principles of truth and to diffuse them among the people, wherever their lot may be cast; like the husbandman who cheerfully sows in the Spring, expecting to reap bountifully the product in harvest. If we never sow, we need not expect ever to reap; but if we sow good seed, in good soil, we have every reason to expect similar, but more abundant in the reaping season.

The Guardian is generally fraught with doctrine, as well as general news,—misrepresentations heaped upon us as a people, are corrected through its columns, and the public mind informed with regard to our movements and policy. If every individual that belongs to the Church in the States, and are able, would subscribe for a copy, we would not have to answer nine-tenths of the letters we receive for counsel, because the paper is the channel through which general counsel is distributed abroad; consequently if our brethren in the various parts of the States, would make their friends and neighbors acquainted with the fact, of a paper being published at Kanesville, under the direction of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; even out of curiosity, many would be led to subscribe, and thereby have access to our views and doctrine; hence the necessity of taking hold and doing all the good you can in your day and generation.

We cannot be saved without others, neither can others be saved without us; we are dependent creatures in a measure, deriving support and nourishment from each other, like the different parts of a natural body. When all the members of a body move in harmony, and union with the head, every part supplies its portion, and there is no discordant feeling or jar in the whole system, and if spots and blemishes should appear, they only evince a lack of the circulating medium, or some other obstruction, which too often tend to corruption and death. Evils in society have their baneful effects, as much, if not more so, than ulcers have on the human system.

The Press being admitted by all, to be under Providence, the greatest Lever or Agent to control the destinies of men, for good or evil; therefore the reward of those who contribute to its support, must be measurably commensurate with the good or evil done by it: Here then is a wide field for operation; if you support a good paper you are supporting the most potent agent on earth to effect good, which will leave a good impression, not on your own mind alone, but also on the minds of all those who receive that paper.

The Guardian is published at one dollar per annum in advance; its pages are devoted in a great measure to the interests of the Latter-day Saints, and every Saint ought in return, to devote a little of his interest to support the paper.

The extensive circulation of the Millennial Star, in England, to a certain extent, is carried on by individual interest and enterprize; and may not we on this side of the Atlantic, put our shoulder to the wheel of intelligence and roll it on upon the same principle? We may, if we are willing.

We offer the foregoing, not by way of a dun, but merely to stir up pure minds by way of remembrance of duty; so that if any feel disposed, they may have a good paper at cheap rate.

Elder Alfred Cordon, and the Branch at Garden Grove.

An article appeared in the third number of this Volume of the Guardian, from under the pen and over the signature of Alfred Cordon, which seems to fit rather tight on the Garden Grove Branch of the Church, and which they say is, in the main incorrect; they are willing to admit that a few of them have been partaking rather too freely of the products of the Still; but as a Branch with the exception of that few, they plead innocent.

Well, we would just as soon have it so as not, and much rather, because drinking too freely of whisky, or any other intoxicating drinks, not only clouds the vision and darkens the understanding of the person who is addicted to it; but also throws an unfavorable influence to a certain extent over the society to which that person belongs. Therefore Saints should guard against all such practices, so that the Gospel be not hindered from producing its salutary effects upon the minds of those who have not yet obeyed it. Jesus said to his disciples in former times: "Ye are the light of the world." These disciples were called Saints, and any real Saint in the last days, is Christ's disciple, and should by all means not only inculcate the principles of sacred writ left on record; but also display the virtue and power of those principles over his character by corresponding actions; then, and not till then, is his faith made perfect; and let us here say, that faith without works is dead, as the body without the spirit. And while surfeiting, drunkenness, and the cares of life, are said to be among the evil signs prior to the coming of the Son of Man in the clouds of Heaven, with power and great glory. We think that Saints ought to take warning, and not be found classed with the rest of the world in darkness, and that day come upon them unawares.

Our reason for advancing these few remarks, is simply, to meet the wishes of both parties, having received a letter from Alfred Cordon to that effect, and let this be the end of the matter. Once more and we are done: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven;" by so doing, you need not fear little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.

New Postage Law.

From and after the first inst., news papers will go free of postage to any Post Office in the County where they are printed. Postage on letters will be three cents if prepaid, and five cents if not, to any place in the United States, except we believe to Califonia, Oregon, &c.

The gentlemanly Clerk of the steamer Saranac, has our thanks for late St. Louis papers.

Salt Lake Mail.

The Mail for Salt Lake passed Fort Kearney on the evening of the 10th ult., ten days out from Independence.

The emigrants on the St. Joseph and Independence roads have been troubled to some extent by Arrapahoes and Cheyenne Indians.

The following is the number of wagons, &c., that passed Fort Kearney up to the 6th June.

Wagons 837; oxen, cows, horses and mules 5,975; men 1,156; women 928; children 799.

The road from Table Creek, or Old Fort Kearney has been passable all the season, when other routes on the South side have been obstructed by high water.

The foregoing we received from a reliable source and may be depended upon. We shall give a more full and lengthy detail of matters and things at a future period when all the emigration shall have passed for this season.

Ice Cream.

Cooling viands may be purchased,
At the "Emporium of the West."
Out of all their rich production,
Their Ice Cream we like the best.

We take the liberty of saying that the lines of poetry to be found in another column of our paper, "Remember the Poor," are from the pen of Hon. P. E. Brocchus, one of the Judges of Utah, whose brief stay amongst us has endeared the people of this community to him.

The Flood.

The Missouri Republican of the 26th ult., says: The water continues to recede slowly. In the 24 hours ending at 6 P. M., yesterday, it fell 2¼ inches—and was at that time, 1 foot 10½ inches above the City Directrix, and 5 feet 8½ inches below the high water of 1844, and 11 inches below the highest water this season.

It also says: that the officers of the steamer Dubuque, from Galena, report that on the 24th, the river was at stand at Galena. and that they found it so as far down as muscatine, thence to this city it was falling.

Post Office Law.

For the benefit of the Postmasters in this County, and all to whom it may concern; we clip the following section of the law respecting the publishing of uncalled-for letters:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That lists of letters remaining uncalled for in any Post Office, in any city, town, or village where a newspaper shall be printed, shall hereafter be published once only, in the newspaper which, being issued weekly, or oftener, shall have the largest circulation, within the range of delivery of said Office, to be decided by the Postmaster at such Office.—[New Post Office Law, passed March 3d, 1851.

Steam Ferry Boat Utah.

This neat and light draught craft, from St. Joseph, Mo., arrived at Kanesville, Landing, on Friday the 5th inst., nearly 5 days out. It is said, she would have accomplished the trip in three days, were it not for some repairs that had to be made; which hindered her over a day. We understand that Mr. Corby, the owner, intends to have her fitted up for passengers, and run her as a regular packet between St. Joseph and this place. We recommend Mr. C's project; and hope that he may receive, a liberal patronage, to justify the continuance of his adventurous undertaking. We are inclined to believe, that such an arrangement would be of essential benefit to the citizens of both places; not only in a commercial point of view, but in a social also.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Remember the Poor.

BY P. E. BROCCHUS.

Remember the poor, whom misfortune detains,
From the place of their holy desires;
Whose hearts follow those who are crossing the plains,
And who surround the distant camp-fires.

Oh! many have traveled from homes far away,
From Fond ties, and from scenes that are dear;
Though the voices of friendship and love bade them stay,
Through great toil they have come, and are here.

Yes, far o'er the main where Atlantic's rude waves,
Along the shore sweep their threatening crest,
They have sighed a farewell to dear friends and dear graves,
For a home in the beautiful west.

Like pilgrims, who long for a dear promised land,
Over mountain and plain they have come,
But here, by the fiat of Heaven, they stand.
Still away from their bright future home.

Remember them then, should pale sickness appear,
And trials upon them descend;
Drive grief from their hearts, from their eye wipe the tear,
To their sorrows and wants give an end.

When Winter shall come, and fircce storms are around,
And make dreary the dwellings of men;
When the forests are sere, and snows bleach the ground,
Oh! comfort them, comfort them, then.

And when spring shall return, haste, haste them away,
To the valley of peace and of rest;
To the mountains that rise, and the streamlets that play,
Through their beautiful home in the West.

Maj. J. E. Barrow,

Maj. Barrow we are happy to see has returned again to his post. And we wish to state that his absence was granted by the Department, and not a disposition on his part to leave his post in time of need.

From the Plains.

It is rumored that 16 or 17 wagons of Oregon Emigrants have returned from Beaver Creek, having lost 55 head of cattle, leaving them barely enough to get back to the river. We could not learn whether the Pawnees ran them off or they stampeded, but understand three or four hundred of these Indians were at their camp begging the day before. There has so many conflicting statements came, in regard to the matter, we shall await the arrival of the company, before we can give any authentic information.

We have heard nothing from the emigration that left this place since they have crossed the river.

Dried Apples and Olive Oil.

We have still on hand, a large supply of the above articles, which we offer for sale low for cash.

BETHLEHEM, July 2, 1851.

MR. EDITOR: A body was found at this place, which had probably drifted down from above in the high water. A description may be of interest and benefit to some one. He was a man about 6 feet high; had on a pair of dark colored jean pants with white bone buttons, blue Kentucky jean vest, with black buttons; white shirt, stogy boots, patches across the toe of each. The body was disfigured by the ravens and exposure, so that he could not be recognized by complexion or hair.

A correspondent of the Missouri Republican, writing from California, under date of the 20th April, says:—Hundreds are making preparations to start soon for the States, across the plains. A company was to have started a week ago. but have been detained by the snow on the mountains, which at present would be very disagreeable indeed. They will go as soon as the season will permit. You may look for a good many arrivals in July from California by the way of Salt Lake.

KANESVILLE, July 9th, 1851.

MR. EDITOR:—I think that you cannot be a man of taste, for I have not seen a word from your pen in regard to the new fashion, which has recently appeared in the East called the "Bloomer," or "a la Turk." I with many others would like to see a discription of this unique fashion in your paper; believing we should see a neat "Bloomer" instead of the "awkward draggle-tails" that now are worn. The ladies of this village do not wish to be out of fashion, so please give them a description of this new style.

Yours, &c. L.

Fashion.

Our correspondent L., gives us a severe castigation for our inattention to notice fashion. We are in favor of every improvement, and if "A LA TURK" is one, WE, like our cotemporaries are ready to chronicle, and give our decision whenever the few one appears in the new habit; in the meantime we would not forsake an old friend for the sake of a NEW ONE, until we have evidence sufficient to establish the fact.

On Tuesday, July 2nd, GEORGE SPAIN, from Kent, England, of Congestive Fever, aged 25 years.

In recording the decease of this young saint, we would notice shortly, that in October 1850 he came among us a stranger, and soon manifested a desire to know something of the principles of the Latter-day Saints; to use his own words, he knew not what had brought him thus far west, he knew nothing of the Mormons till he approached near their settlements but so many things were said against them, that as he came nearer to this place, he slept with his knife under his head, but finding that they had been basely and maliciously misrepresented, he mingled freely among them; and during the winter, when others were engaged in the joyous dance, he would sit till past midnight with some who had suffered much among the people; in short, he heard the truth and obeyed the gospel, he was a consistent, faithful, and obedient member, charitable to the poor, oft hauling wood to warm the widow and orphan, over industrious in his out-door labor, beloved by many and respected by all, and without even one enemy as far as we know: we can truly testify of him. Blessed is he—he rests from his labors, he died in Christ, and awaits an early resurrection,—when once the vials of God's wrath are poured out upon the wicked and disobedient. His latter end was peace.

The Frontier Guardian.

FRIDAY, JULY 11, 1851.

From the New York Tribune, 20th.

The annexed letter, of which we gave the substance yesterday afternoon, was received by Messrs. Beebee & Co., of Wall street, from one of the leading houses in San Francisco. Its representations are probably much more correct than the newspaper accounts:

SAN FRANCISCO, Wed., May 14, 1851.

Since the date of our last circular there has been a destructive fire in this City. Nearly all the which were on shore, and the buildings in which they were stored, were consumed. Neither iron nor brick resisted the conflagration, and a few isolated stores at both extremities of the City are all that remain of the business part of San Francisco. It is difficult to ascertain the amount of merchandise which has been lost. We consider that in bulk it might have amounted to eight ships' cargoes, but even if it were ten, the actual value would not in our opinion have exceeded $900,000 or $1,000,000. We found our calculation on the fact that almost all the buildings which were burned were shops, the contents of which are generally unpacked, and consequently occupied much space. In value these stocks might have ranged from $2,000 to $3,000 each. Some large stores and three storeships have been destroyed; but on the whole we consider that the merchandise might be replaced for a million dollars.

The fleet has been saved. Of staple goods there is abundance in the harbor, and there is no actual scarcity of anything. There has been no business done since the calamity, except to supply the daily wants of the population of the City. The steamers have carried very little up the river, and it is not easy to say how the market may open.

The town of Stockton has also been burned since the departure of the last packet. The amount of goods destroyed has been trifling, and the large sums represented as having been lost by individuals, arises from the high value which parties placed on wooden and canvass houses, and which can be replaced on very moderate terms.

Lumber is rising in price, but it is still a loosing article to the importer. We have heard the stock estimated at sixteen millions of feet. Some of this lumber has been long on hand, and we fear that the quality of portions of it may be deteriorated. Of necessity, this destruction of merchandise must enhance the value of what remains, and what may be on the way hither; but it has crippled the dealers in the meantime.

The mining population use three fourths of the goods imported here. It does not suit them to hold stocks of anything, and on this account we think that it will be mostly a retail trade which will be done here this year: although the amount of business will be greater than in any former season. We may naturally expect that the prices of bulky articles in general use will advance. Good rates are going for furniture, cookery, willow ware and tin ware, and we expect to see these attain to as high rates as have ruled since August, 1849.

We think there is not much clothing or dry goods in the harbor, and good prices may be expected for the next ten months. The first arrivals of suitable supplies which may be shipped by fast sailing vessels after receipt of the news of the burning of San Francisco, will pay very handsomely.

Picture of the Fire.

The Editor of the Alta California gives the following vivid picture of the conflagration:

Iron and zinc curled up like scorched leaves, and sent forth their brilliant flames of green, blue and yellow tints; mingling with and modifying the great red tongues of fire which flashed upward from a thousand burning houses. The hill sides were lighted as if the sun were above the eastern mountains, and their trees, shrubs, herbage and houses were as distinguishable in the night light as if it were noon. Darkness hung over a large portion of the shipping, where the broad and heavy ocean of smoke lay down in impenetrable gloom over the Bay. People became paralyzed. Many removed their stocks of goods, or portions of them, four or five times, and had them overtaken and destroyed by the flames at last. The streets were crammed with masses of human beings and rushing teams, only giving way before the advance of the elements, as the smoke and heat and crashing walls pushed them back. Men became mad: some rushed headlong into the flames. Weeping women and prattling infancy were wandering amid ashes and destruction. Every few moments the earth and air trembled, as great buildings were torn into fragments by explosions of gunpowder, and the atmosphere was filled with shattered timbers, brick and mortar. The multitude hung upon the borders of this vast "sea of flame;" few comparatively knew, or could know what were the dangers and exertions of those who were within the range of the stifling smoke and scorching flame. In less than nine hours from the beginning, more than twenty squares existed only in memory and in the ascending columns of smoke and flame which covered the city's site.

But the saddest sight was the destruction of brave, but bewildered men, who finding themselves suddenly surrounded with fire, rushed, staggered and uncertain, from flame to flame, in hopeless efforts to escape, until strangled and scorched they writhed and fell in full view of hundreds, who were completely powerless to save them. Others after basking inside of what they had considered fire-proofs, finding their efforts to save the buildings vain, endeavored to escape, but too late. The doors and window blinds were red hot, and could not be opened in some instances, and their last chance of safety failed them. We cannot express our sensations of yesterday while looking upon the blackened remains of poor humanity, as they still lay, burned to coals, amid the fire which filled the cellar of a building on Montgomery st., still beyond the reach of all who gazed upon them. May we never again see so horrible a spectacle.

Liquor Law.

Our neighbors and friends in this town and County, perhaps are not aware of the fact that this law takes effect from and after the first day of July. We have therefore thought it advisable to lay the law before them, as taken from the revised Code.

We would strongly urge upon our friends to comply with the requirements of the law upon this subject; by so doing, they will save themselves both trouble and expense; as the Sheriff says that he is determined to let loose the law on every offender. That's right Mr. Sheriff, do your duty faithfully, and the people of this County will sustain you to the last, in carrying out the measures of our State Legislature; but if you act otherwise, it will plainly show that you are of the milk and water order.

CHAPTER 55.

The Sale of Intoxicating Liquors.

The people of this state will hereafter take no share in the profits of retailing intoxicating liquors, but the traffic in those commodities as articles of merchandise is not prohibited.

The retail of intoxicating liquors in the manner which is commonly denominated "by the glass" or "by the dram" is hereby prohibited, and the sale of liquors in any quantity with a view of their being drank on or about the premises is a selling by the dram within the meaning of this section.

The places commonly known as "dram shops" are hereby prohibited and declared public nuisances, and their establishment shall be held presumptive evidence of the violation of the provision contained in the preceding section.

The establishment or the keeping of a place of any description whatever, and whether within or without a building, coming within the spirit and intent of this chapter, and the establishment or the keeping a place of any description where other persons are accustomed to resort, providing their own liquors of the prohibited character purchased elsewhere and drinking them there shall be taken to be within the meaning of this chapter.

Every person engaged in any of the above prohibited or in any way aiding or assisting in such illegal traffic, whether as principal or clerk, bar keeper, or otherwise shall be subject to the penalties herein provided.

Courts and juries are required to constrüe this chapter so as to prevent evasions and subterfuges and so as to cover the act of giving as well as of selling in the places above prohibited.

Whoever is guilty of violating any of the provisians of this chapter, on conviction, therof shall be fined in a sum not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than ninety days or both in the discretion of the court, and may be prosecuted therefore either by indictment, or by information before a justice of the peace; but if by information before a justice of the peace the punishment shall be by fine only.

An information or indictment under this chapter may allege any number of violations of its provisions by the same party and he may be found guilty of and punished for each act as under seperate indictments or informations, but a seperate judgement must be entered in each instance in which a verdict of guilty is found. And the proceedings may be the same when they are against the building or other property itself as herein provided.

The information and indictment herein authorized may be made or found against the shop or building or ground itself in or upon which the prohibited traffic is carried on, under a description of ordinary certainty, alleging that the prohibited liquor has been there retailed in the manner forbidden; and proof of such retail by any person will be sufficient, and the building and ground and the liquors and the furniture shall be liable to the penalties herein prescribed, and when an information is filed supported by an affidavit they shall be held in the same manner as if under an attachment and shall be dealt with as when an indictment is found.

The building in which a shop or other establishment herein prohibited is set up, whether permanently or temporarily, and the lot or other ground (not exceeding forty acres) on which the same stands, if owned by any person engaged in the prohibited business or if owned and leased by a person who demised it knowing that such establishment was to be set up or such traffic carried on therein, shall be subject to a lien, although not proceeded against directly, for the purpose hereafter directed; and when an indictment is found it is made the duty of the court to command the sheriff by proper process to seize the establishment and close it and keep possession of the goods therein until the final determination of the prosecution. But nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to subject the homestead to execution or lien in any case whatever.

In the cases mentioned in the proceeding two sections the property may be released by any person filing a bond in a penal sum not less than five hundred dollars with one or more sufficient freehold sureties, which bond and sureties must be approved by the clerk or justice and the condition of which must recite that the principal therein assumes to be the owner or keeper of the said establishment and takes upon himself the liabilities arising therefrom, and the condition shall be that the parties thereto undertake to pay a fine and costs which may be adjudged against the person or property informed against or indicted.

Upon the conviction of any person engaged in any establishment prohibited in this chapter, the proper matter being found, and also upon the conviction of the property the court is required to declare such establishment a nuisance and the proper officer shall be commanded to abate the nuisance by taking possession of the establishment and selling the vessels, furniture, and other goods found therewith for the payment of the fine and costs.

The authority to grant licenses to retail the liquors herein prohibited contained in the charter of any incorporated town or city is hereby repealed; but existing licenses whether granted by towns or counties are not affected by these provisions, and these provisions are not to extend to boats or vessels, other than ferry boats, usually navigating waters which are not exclusively the waters of this state unless the laws of the other states having concurrent jurisdiction over such waters contain substantially similar provisions.

Fire.

Steamer Sultana and Angelbeck's Missouri Sugar Refinery destroyed.

At half-past ten o'clock this morning, the report reached us of the breaking out of another fire on board the steamer Sultana, which lay near the foot of Mullanphy street, and was taking aboard some corn from the steamer Red River, lying alongside.

The Sultana was freighted in part by a large quantity of hemp. The smoke was first discovered issuing through the door of the ladies' cabin, the fire having caught immediately underneath, and a moment after several deck hands ran forward from the engine room and gave the alarm.

The upper works of the Sultana, with all her freight were destroyed in the course of half an hour. The hull was still burning when we left. She had on board about 963 bales of hemp, 2000 pigs of lead, 40 casks of bacon, 150 coils of rope, 70 tierces lard, 487 sacks bran, 68 bales hay. The freight, we believe, is entirely covered by insurance on polices in New Orleans offices. The safe was rescued, but the books and papers destroyed. The Sultana was owned three-fourths by her commander Capt. George W. Cable, and the remaining fourth by the clerk Mr. John Skiles. She was insured for $30,000, equally in the Madison, Lexington, Columbia, Floating Dock, and Union Companies. Several boats were lying with the Sultana when she caught fire.

The bow of the Columbus was lying just against her stern. She, with the other boats however, succeeded in freeing herself, and they all drooped further below or anchored at the opposite shore. Yesterday afternoon, when the flames had abated, it was scuttled and sunk. The Sultana, whether as a freight or passage boat, was one of the finest Steamers that came to our landing. She was built in Cincinnati in the year 1848, and measured 926 tons, custom-house tonnage.

The total loss, including boat and freight, is about $75,000—on the loss of the boat, $40,000; on her cargo, $35,000.

At the direction of the Mayor, Capt. Cozens started at an early stage of the conflagration, to secure the ferry-boat for assistance, in the event that the burning hull should break loose and float amongst the other boats that line the Levee.

The sparks from the Sultana set fire to the Missouri Sugar Refinery of Mr. Angelbeck, situated at the foot of Mullanphy street on the levee. Mr. A. will lose stock and fixtures to the amount of $25,000, of which $20,000 is insured equally in the Knox, Merchants' and Planters', City Company of Cincinnati, and Nashville Insurance Company.—[St. Louis Rep. 15th.

The Eight Wonder of the World--Ham and Pork for Sale at a Printing Office!!

We notice an advertisement in the Frontier Guardian, (a paper edited by Elder Orson Hyde,) of Hams and Shoulders for sale at that Office. The Printers must be rich out on the Frontier to have their provisions at their Office for sale. It is different in Michigan for the Printer has hard work to get such articles even on subscription, for when he asks for bread he gets a stone, and if he asks for a Ham or Shoulder he gets a cold shoulder turned to him.

Perhaps the good folks in Michigan are becoming like the Jews in former times, who knowing the law transgressed it. But the scriptures speaks of the Gentiles as follows: "For when the Gentiles which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, knowing not the law, are a law unto themselves; which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another."

We are here on the borders of a savage country, measurably without law, and we must say in justice to our friends, that we find it no trouble to get along; for when we want bread we have nothing to do but to ask it, and some kind person comes running in from the country next day with good wheat flour, and should we want a Ham our friends respond immediately; and when we want shoulders we can have them either Warm or Cold as best suit us. We are conscience men on the Frontier and should some of our brethren of the Press get starved out in Michigan among white folks, we would advise them to pick up their effects and come here, and share in the hospitality of the Mormons, and their friends.

The Eight Wonder of the World in Michigan, is but a daily occurrence in Kanesville.

NEW YORK MILLIONAIRES.—The Evening Post in alluding to a pamphlet lately published, says:

According to this pamphlet there are but two millioners in the city, William B. Astor, who owns $3,600,300, and whose taxes amount to $29,579,26; and Peter Lorrilard, whose property is set down at $1,169,900. Boston, we believe, boasts of eight or ten millionaires, some of whom are worth six millions and more.

Slave and Free Negroes.

The whole increase of the United States population for the last ten years is 6,198,045, of which 5,472,931 are whites, 692,234 slaves, and 32,880 free colored.

As compared with the whole present population, says the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, this is 28,78 per cent increase among the whites, 21,77 among the slaves, and only 7,84 among the free colored. A discrepancy so striking in regard to the last mentioned as to challenge investigation as to the cause of so singular a variation from the general law governing population in this country

It is said that the census, nearly completed shows a dimmution in the population of Ireland, since 1844 of 2,000,000 inhabitants.

Answer to Rebus in our Last.

BY ——.

An answer to W. W. M's. rebus,
I'll here attempt without any fuss,
The animal useful to most of mankind,
Is d-o-g,—dog, I think you'll find,
And these reversed, that name will spell,
To honor which, all will do well,
Ev'n God our Maker and our friend,
If we prove faithful to the end.
The next four letters, will spell "Star."
Which light to earth brings from afar,
And these reversed, the "rats" will name,
Animals of no good fame.
Then these seven, spell Dog-Star,
Which from our planet shines afar.
It's other name I will define,
"Sir," a title of rank is a sign,
"I" a great letter, is useful to all;
Male and female, great and small;
The other two, of this rebus,
Is the personal pronoun u-s, us,
Dog-Star, and Sirius, are, I guess;
Both names required, say "no or yes."

ANSWER BY AMICUS TO W. W. M'S. REBUS.

Impromptu.

Friend M—— the fierce dog-star makes a stir in its season,
So does anything wonderful! 't is logical reason,
But for value of dogs, I never could find,
Any use to myself, "or the rest of mankind,"
But in changing these letters I find the reverse
The great and good ruler of this sunny earth,
The other four letters a bright shining star,
That sheds its rich radiance upon earth from afar,
By reversing, t'will give you of rats a fierce horde,
My friend sure your Webster was not on the board.
The dog-star is sometimes called Sirius true,
And Sir is applied, oft to great and small too;
Big I to be sure is no dwarf lad or pigmy,
U. S. you'll admit has now solved your enigma,
Since you were so kind as to answer before;
Now good friends solve the puzzle I give you once more,
Forgive my dull wit, lack of humor and rhyme.
And I'll be less facetious at a more leisure time.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Enigmatical Charade.

BY AMICUS.

My first is a mixture of grain of bad smelling,
And sometimes I'm spoken to keep one from telling;
My Second's a name quite familiar and common,
That's been answered by queen's and applied oft to woman;
My third is an instrument of importance and power,
That often assists in a princely rich dower;
My fourth is a name used in far by-gone days;
And to men is applied so the Spelling Book says:
My fifth is much used in the art most divine,
Without there's discord in each musical line:
My whole are five words, each a sensible name;
That backwards and forwards each way spells the same;
Now place each word single, in order all right,
One under the other, the initials at sight,
Will spell you a title, respectful; not vain;
That backwards and forward; each way spell the same,
And also the finals spell up or spell down,
Is a title to please any lady in town,
My first word and second will spell you quite clear;
When combined and transposed the name of the year,
My third and my fourth word; combined and in order,
Is a name, geographic near Asia's wild border,
My fourth and my fifth; if you serve them the same,
Gives a large ancient city, and a vast watery main,
Now ye Ladies of Kanesville, gents of humor and wit,
Please solve this enigma and give answer to fit.

A HERD OF BUFFALO LATELY DISCOVERED.

THE undersigned would inform all emigrants and others concerned that his improved single shooting pistols can be had at the Guardian office, or at the manufacturers shop eight Miles South of Kanesville,—also revolving rifles of a superior quality can be had at said shop.

Call and see them, and judge for yourselves, the subscriber is confident however, that they will be found to be convenient and of the utmost utility to those who may have to cross the Plains this season.

Remember the Guardian office,—there you can see them. JONATHAN BROWNING.

POETRY.

Why this Longing.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

Why this longing, clay clad spirit!
Why this flattering of thy wings?
Why this striving to discover
Hidden and transcendent things?
Be contented in thy prison,
Thy captivity shall cease—
Taste the good that smiles before thee;
Reckless spirit, be at peace!

With the roar of wintry forests,
With the thunder's crash and roll,
With the rush of stormy water,
Thou wouldst sympathise, O soul.
Thou wouldst ask them mighty questions
In language of their own,
Untranslatable to mortals,
Yet not utterly unknown.

Thou wouldst fathom Life and Being,
Thou wouldst see through Birth and Death,
Thou would'st solve the eternal Riddle—
Thou a speck, a ray, a breath.
Thou wouldst look at stars and systems,
As if thou couldst understand
All the harmonies of Nature,
Struck by an Almighty hand.

With thy feeble logic, tracing
Upward from effect to cause,
Thou art foiled by Nature's barriers,
And the limits of her laws.
Be at Peace, then struggling spirit!
Great Eternity denies
The unfolding of its secrets
In the circle of thine eyes.

Be contented with thy freedom—
Dawning is not perfect day;
There are truths thou canst not fathom,
Swaddled in thy robes of clay.
Rest in hope that if thy circle
Grows not wider here in time:
God's eternity shall give thee
Power of vision more sublime.

Clogged and bedded in the darkness,
Little germ, abide thine hour;
Thou'lt expand in proper season,
Into blossom, into flower.
Humble faith alone becomes thee
In the gloom where thou art lain;
Bright is the appointed future;
Wait—thou shalt not wait in vain.

Cease thy struggling, feeble spirits!
Fret not at thy prison bars;
Never shall thy mortal pinions
Make the circuit of the stars.
Here on the earth are duties for thee,
Suited to thine earthly scope,
Seek them, thou immortal spirit,
God is with thee—work in hope.

MISCELLANY.

Farmer's Creed.

We believe in small farms and thorough cultivation.

We believe that the soil loves to eat, as well as its owner, and ought to be manured.

We believe in large crops which leave the land better than they found it, making both the farmer and the farm rich at once.

We believe in going to the bottom of things—and therefore in deep ploughing and enough of it. All the better with a subsoil plough.

We believe the best fertilizer of any soil is a spirit of industry, enterprise and intelligence—without this, lime and gypsum, bones and green manure, marl and guano, will be of little use.

We believe in good fences, good barns, good farm-houses, good stock, good orchards and children enough to gather the fruit.

We believe in a clean kitchen, a neat wife in it, a spinning piano, a clean cupboard, and a clear conscience.

We disbelieve in farmers who will not improve—in farms that grow poorer every year—farmer's boys turning into clerks and merchants—in farmers ashamed of their vocation.

The Good Farmer wears russet clothes, but makes golden payments, having tin in his buttons, and silver in his pockets. In his house he is bountiful both to strangers and poor people. He seldom goes far abroad, and his credit stretches farther than his travels. He improveth his land to a double value by his good husbandry. In time of famine he is the Joseph of the country, and keeps the poor from starving.

Terebration.

AN ACT FROM AN UNPUBLISHED DRAMA.

Dramatis Personæ—An Editor and two bores.

Scene—Editor's Sanctum.

[Enter two bores.]

First Bore—Good morning, Mr. Editor—fine day!

Editor—[looking hard at his work, and scribbling furiously]—Yes sir, fine weather, for people who have the leisure to enjoy it—but it's nothing to me, sir.

Second Bore—Why, yours is the prettiest business in the world—I should like to be an Editor myself.

Editor—It has its vexations, however.

First Bore—Ah! indeed! what are they?

Editor—Why, perhaps the worst is bores, people who worry an Editor because they can't think of anything else to do.

Second Bore—Is it possible?

Editor—Worse than that—it's a fact.

First Bore—Well—that is comical!

Editor—Yes—to you, perhaps—I mean, to the bores—but its confounded tragical to every body else.

Second Bore—[Trying to change the subject, and returning to the weather again]—Vegetation has taken a rapid start.

Editor—Yes, sir,—there's a lesson for some people in that.

First Bore—And the trees are beginning to leave.

Editor—So they are—the trees are very reasonable in that respect—they do leave sometime or other. Allow me, gentlemen, to recommend their example to you, as worthy of imitation. [Exeunt bores in amazement. Editor bolts the door, and falls into reverie, from which he is presently aroused by the devil's call for "copy."—[Boston Post.

PHŒBUS, WHAT A NAME!—In the census returns of part of District No. 2, Johnson county Illinois, is the name of M. M. E. S. P. H. D. S. J. Tubb!

A Word to Parents.

What the princess of Egypt said to mother of the babe that wept in its ark of rushes on the reedy Nile, the voice of Almighty addresses to every parent on whose bosom is laid a bud of immortality: "Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages."

"Nurse it for me!" For the "King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God." Are you able? Will you engage to make it his loyal subject? Then labor night and day, at the dawn and in the dews of morning, with sleepless prayer and a patience next only to that of redeeming love.

"I will give thee thy wages." Do you accept the conditions? Do you believe the promise? Years may pass and you see no recompense, reap no harvest but tears. Still go forth, weeping if you will, yet bearing precious seed, for unless the treasury of Heaven be empty, or the truth of God can fail, your toil shall find payment.

But you must be faithful to the articles of agreement. "Nurse it for me"—not for the world. The world hath wages too. Yea, and she will doubtless pay those who train up their child after her fashions, in the broad road where thousands go. She hath a variety of wages, suited to the degree of service that may have been rendered, apples of Sodom, wood, hay, stubble, the whirlwind, "the worm that never dies, and the fire that is never quenched."—American Messenger.

Geological Formation of Iowa--Coal Beds.

The following is extracted from a report of the principal Geologist, Dr. Owen, to a Scientific Convention lately held in Cincinnati:

Along the western confines of the Dubuque District in Iowa, the upper magnesian limestone is succeeded by a calcareous formation of a more recent geological epoch, which corresponds to the Devonian system of Europe. It extends west to the Iowa River and is seen about twelve miles above Iowa City. Thence it extends in a southeast direction towards the Mississippi, in a zone about 30 miles in width.

Between Johnson and Iowa counties an uplift of carboniferous sandstone is encountered, which is probably near the eastern limits of the Des Moine coal field. The Iowa river meanders near the eastern margin of this coal field, but the seams presented on the river are of inferior quality. It is upwards of two hundred miles in the direction of the Valley of the Des Moines across this great coal field. Westwardly it extends from the Des Moines river nearly across the State of Iowa, and includes a considerable portion of Missouri.

The entire area of this coal field, in Iowa alone, cannot be less than 20,000 square miles, in all, embracing a country nearly equal in extent to the State of Indiana. Although of so great an area, this western coal field is comparitively shallow in Iowa, probably hardly exceeding fifty fathoms in thickness. It consists of three well-marked divisions—a lower calcareous about one hundred feet thick; middle argillaceous from fifty to one hundred feet thick; and an upper siliceous from eighty to one hundred and twenty-five feet thick. The beds of coal at present discovered are confined to the middle division, and are hence, probably, not over one hundred feet in thickness.

THE NEW THREE CENT PIECE is now in free circulation. It has been said it would be a general favorite and facilitate trade among traders to a great extent, on account of its convenience. It is about the size of a five cent piece, though thinner. On one side it is circled, by the words "United States of America, 1821," with a single star filling the centre, and on which is the usual representation of the shield. On the reverse side is the circle of the thirteen stars, with a large C enclosing III. In Philadelphia, on Thursday, as we learn from the Ledger, the rush for these pieces at the Mint was great, but every facility was extended by the officers to the public for their accomodation.

ROPE ENOUGH.—At a late disunion festival in South Carolina, one of the toasts drank was this: "A rope to every northern abolitionist." A Kentucky editor proposes to amend by attaching a southern disunionist to the other end of the rope; and he thinks Kentucky will furnish gratis all the hemp necessary for the whole operation.

How much more might people accomplish if they would but make it a point to carry out whatever they undertake.

The Rotation of the Earth made Visible.

Mr. W. C. Bond, of the Cambridge Observatory, addresses the following to the Boston Traveler:

"I have succeeded satisfactorily in repeating Foucault's experiment respecting the rotation of the earth. The new tower of the Western wing of the observatory. I found to be perfectly adapted to the purpose. My arrangements are in this way: Across the top of the central pier, which is a hollow cone, thirty feet high, there is firmly fixed a wooden beam, having the centre perforated to admit the the passage of a wire, and the fixing of a Torsion Circle, such as is used with the Gauss Magnetometers. To the centre of this circle is attached one end of a silver wire, thirty feet long, of the size commonly known as "fine No. 6," and to the other end of this wire is fastened a metallic cylinder, weighing about four pounds, and terminating below in a conical point, on a platform, directly below the weight and about thirty feet below the point of suspension, is inscribed a circle of six and a half feet diameter, with the requisite sub-divisions and radii. After giving the pendulum an unbiassed arc of vibration, a few minutes' observation will suffice to show with certainty, the motion of the earth on its axis, as the terminating point of the weight will be seen at each successive vibration, to arrive at the northern boundary of the circle a little more easterly than it did at the preceding one."

Another correspondent says, that this beautiful experiment is so simple that it may be readily repeated in most of our dwellings.

Wealth is Not Happiness.

No, a man may possess all the world can give him and yet be miserable, if he has a groveling, fettered, undevout mind. Let him have his garden, his fields, his lawns, for grandeur, plenty, ornament, and gratification, while at the same time God is not in all his thoughts. And let another have neither field nor garden; let him look at nature with an enlightened mind—a mind that can see and adore the Creator and his works—can consider them as demontrations of his power, his wisdom, his goodness, and in all his poverty, he is far happier than the other in his riches. The one is but little higher than a beast, the other but little lower than an angel.

Avoid Deception.

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive."

Persons who practice deceit and artifice always deceive themselves more than they deceive others. They may feel great complacency in view of the success of their doings; but they are in reality casting a mist before their own eyes. Such persons not only make a false estimate of their own character, but they estimate falsely the opinions and conduct of others. Would you read things rightly within and without?—do not lead others amiss; see to it that your motives are right, and then let them be apparent. No person is obliged to tell all he thinks; but both duty and self-interest forbid him ever to make false pretences.—[Advocate and Guardian.

From the Family Herald.

Mesmerism, Mormonism, and Monachism.

This week we make a digression from our series of articles on "The world." for the sake of variety.

Nothing, apparently, can be more unlike than the three agents which we have placed at the head of this article; and yet they are all three at present engaged in one common effort to realize a royal road to the alleviation of the bodily ailments of humanity. We have watched them all for some time, and occasionally have spoken of each; but we never were so well prepared as now to bring them together into one field of vision, and describe their peculiar qualifications.

Moreover we seem in a manner providentially called upon to do so at this particular time; for in one week were sent to us, from very opposite quarters, between which there is no communion whatever, two publications, one containing a list of remarkable cures performed by mesmeric manipulation, and the other containing a list of still more wonderful cures performed suddenly by laying on of hands and anointing with olive oil, commanding the disease to depart in the name of the Lord; whilst, at the present moment, the Catholic world is effervescing with increased activity in the performance of wonders of a similar nature, but with means very different.

These three parties all profess to have truth to teach, and they appeal to these facts as an evidence of this truth. But, as their respective truths are in direct opposition to each other, we consider it our duty to set them all three in their tri-une simplicity before the eyes of our readers, with our own reflections on the phenomena which they present.

Mr. Thomas Capern is, we believe, almost universally acknowledged to be the most successful mesmerist in this country. We met him once, and once only. He is a short, stout, healthy, jolly, benevolent looking John Bull, the very picture of good-nature, honesty and sincerity. It is impossible to look at him, and suspect him of any evil intention to a human being; and the fact of his having for many years gratuitously devoted his time to the alleviation of the sufferings of his fellow creatures, is of itself sufficient to silence the tongue of scandal against him. And, indeed, he did silence it in Tiverton and the neighbourhood, where he resided before his removal to the Mesmeric Infirmary of London; and clergy and laity, rich and poor, found at last their prejudices removed by his persoverance and success.

Mr. Capern has now published a list of some of his most remarkable cures, and they consist of many of the most inveterate and intractable diseases to which flesh is heir—blindness itself not excluded; and these diseases have fled before the touch of Mr. Capern, as they did before that of Valentine Greatrakes. However, they do not fly immediately; sometimes weeks or months are required to effect the final cure; but frequently a sensible improvement, and sometimes a cure, is experienced at the first touch of his hand. On one occasion he met an invalid going to the doctor, supported by two sticks; he stopped him, and took him into a neighbouring house, where he commenced his manipulations unknown to the patient. In a few minutes the pain entirely left him, and he walked home as briskly as ever, to the astonishment of his wife. Such rapidity of cure, however, is rare with mesmerism, which, in general, is a slow and tedious process; and we observe that Mr. Caperns cases of blindness are never total in both eyes. There is total blindness of one eye, and almost total blindness with cataract in both; but no case of cure of total blindness is recorded; nor is there a single case of lost hearing restored; but there is one case of dumbness cured in five minutes. What has been done is sufficiently wonderful; and it can be no detraction from the great merit of Mr. Capern's services to suffering humanity that much is left undone. We do not expect perfection in any of the arts; nor do we believe that it would be for the good of mankind, in their present circumstances, if the ailments of the body could be always easily cured. They are all, more or less, providential agents for teaching man wisdom—checks upon human indiscretion and folly, which, without moral danger, can never be removed, till man collectively becomes wiser and better. As hope, however, is the life of the soul, and the possibility of restoration is the food of hope, it is cheering to think that there are remedial agencies in nature reserved for even the most obdurate and inveterate ailments.

Let us now take a short peep at a very different species of Therapeutists, who produce effects of a similar and even more wonderful nature; for the diseases are more desperate, and the cures more rapid—sometimes instantaneous. We merely take our authority, however, be it remembered, from printed books; we have no personal knowledge of the Mormonites; but we consider ourselves in duty bound, as a public teacher, to investigate every subject of universal interest, or every movement with any such pretensions. We have long been familiar with the character and professions of the Mormonite body. These Mormons are growing amazingly. They now constitute a little nation. They form one of the United States—the State of Utah, or Deseret; and their prophet, Brigham Young, the successor of Joseph Smith, is the legitimate governor acknowledged by Congress. They expect soon to be two States. They are rapidly increasing by conversion and emigration, and have a city and villages of their own, and are now founding a university, and appointing professors, one of whom is at present on his way from England. A few years ago they were despised over all the States; now, when an apostle visits the capital, he is courted and flattered on all sides by the American legislators. And one of them lately, on his way to Italy to found a church, in passing through Washington, had his pocket filled with proffered letters of introduction to Italians from the legislators of the Great Republic. In England they amount to upwards of thirty thousand. In London, where they have been for only three years, they have already baptized three thousand converts; and they are making preparation for laying siege to the faith or credulity of all nations at the approaching festival of the Great Exhibition.

They are bold fellows these Mormons. Now let us hear what they do. The Mesmerists will not like it, we know, and perhaps they will sneer, but still "it is printed, and we read it in a book;" and the question is, are we to believe the mesmerist and disbelieve the Mormonite book? Charity forbids.

The Mormonite cures exceed anything as yet recorded of Mesmerism; and the publication from which we quote informs us, that the printed list is but a small proportion of the countless number. We quote the verba ipsissima (words themselves) of the writer, Orson Pratt, the President of the Twelve Apostles, now on his way to the Salt Lake city, as appointed Principal of the Mormonite University:—"There are now about six hundred branches of the Church of Christ in the British island, consisting of upwards of thirty thousand believers, and between three and four thousand Elders and Priests. Now, there is scarcely a branch of the Saints (Latter-Day Saints) among this nation but have been blessed, more or less, with the miraculous signs and gifts of the Holy Spirit, by which they have been confirmed, and know of a surety that this is the Church of Christ. They know that the blind see, the lame walk, the deaf hear, the dumb speak, that lepers are cleansed, that bones are set, that the cholera is rebuked, and the most virulent diseases give way, through faith in the name of Jesus Christ, and the power of his Gospel. These are not some isolated cases that occasionally take place or that are rather doubtful in their nature, or that have transpired a long time ago, or in some distant country; but are taking place at this present period, every week furnishes scores of instances in all parts of this land. Many of the sick out of the Church have, through the laying on of the hands of the servants of God, been healed. It is not something done in a corner, but openly, and tens of thousands are witnesses".

Total blindness is cured—and that suddenly; deafness and dumbness of many years' duration are cured instantaneously; the bones of a broken back rush together into their place with a noise like the crushing of a basket, whilst the ceremony of anointing and invocation is being performed; a dislocated thighbone, which had long defied all surgical skill, jumps suddenly into its socket, when commanded to do so by an Elder of the Church as he anoints the patient with oil in the name of the Lord; rupture is suddenly healed up, and the truss is thrown away, and never more resumed; fever is rebuked, and flies at the word that commands it to depart. All this is done not by Mesmerism, and yet it is done by laying on of hands. But there is something additional; there is a solemn religious ceremonial and unction. The Mesmerist looks to the properties of matter, and some secret power of Nature, for a cure; the Mormonite looks directly to God. There is something more sublime, devotional, and elevating, but less philosophical, in the Mormonite system. The Mesmerist is a philosopher; he mentions not the name of God; and the name of Jesus, perhaps, he would be ashamed to utter. He is a scientific man, and he studies the laws of nature; he digs deep in the earth for the gold. The Mormonite looks for it on the surface—sub Jove sereno (under the blue heaven).

But are these cures actually performed? We cannot tell; they are printed in a book.

But, if such cures are real, then Mormonism must be the true religion! Stop a little, reasoner! Your conclusion is illegitimate. Even the Mormonite book will tell you that "miracles, when taken alone, are no evidence whatever of the divine mission of any one, but only when taken in connexion with a pure, holy, and infallible doctrine,"—which doctrine does not want an evidence. The Scriptures say that devils work miracles, and that three different kinds of devils are to be sent out in the latter-days to perform them. You may see the passage in Rev. xvi., 14. So be not too hasty to become a Saint, but reason a little longer. Besides, the doctrine is neither holy nor infallible, and therefore the miracles cannot be conclusive evidences of its truth. Thus, for instance, Mr. Orson Pratt says, "the nature of the Message in the Book of Mormon is such, that if true, no one can possibly be saved and reject it; and, if false, no one can possibly be saved and receive it." From which we might conclude, that a Mormon stands as small a chance of salvation as anybody in the world.

But there is another reason why you should not become a Mormonite, and that is, that the monks are doing the very same sort of works. They also are working miracles. This will puzzle, perhaps bewilder you; at all events, it will make you pause. Monks and Nuns have always been thaumaturgists, or dealers in miracles, and the whole system of Popery may be said to have been reared by them. They are the saints and saintesses, the gods and goddesses of Rome, and they rule the Church both on earth and in heaven; for, after they are dead, their bones, and their images, and their spirits work all sorts of wonders to bewilder the senses. It is chiefly with these dead monks that the live monks work; and not with the laying on of living hands, but with the touch of death—dry bones gathered from the churchyard—wrinkled skin stolen from the worms—wooden images—papier mache figures, with bones inside of them—medals of the Virgin suspended on the neck. These and other relics of death and symbols of materialism are the means which monks, in all ages, have employed to work the wonders of which legends are full; and these are still the means which in our own day, are abundantly used for curing dsseases of every description.

It is impossible, in a short article, to give a minute account of any of these cures, or of the evidence upon which their truth is sustained; or to specify, in particular, the saints and saintesses whose bones and images are most successful in the performance of miracles. Suffice it to say that, notwithstanding all the honors that are heaped upon the Virgin Mary, she is at present eclipsed by the Great Saint Philomena, surnamed "the Great" by Pope Leo XII., on account of the numberless miracles performed by her bones. These bones are kept in a papier mache image, the picture of life, painted and dressed, and lying on a couch, supported in a half-sitting posture by soft cushions, the whole enclosed in a glazed ebony shrine or case, presented to the Saint by the Bishop of Potenza. This Saint lived, so says herself, about the year 300, A. D. But she was never known or heard of till the beginning of this century, when a tomb in the Catacombs of Rome was discovered, with "Lumena pax tecum Fi" upon it; and they made Filumena of it, and immediately monks and nuns had visions and revelations about it. The bones were first taken to Naples by a Monk named Francisco, and being lodged in the house of Donna Angela Rosa Terres, she was instantly cured of an inveterate complaint of twelve years' standing. Then Don Michel Ulpicella, a sexagenarian, was instantly cured of a sciatica of six months' standing. Other cures rapidly followed. Soon after, the relics were permanently enshrined at Mugnano, about twenty miles from Naples, in a Chapel endowed on purpose, and there to this day they remain as a source of healing power for all devout Catholics to resort to in cases of extremity. Nor would it be easy to mention a complaint, not even death itself, which these wonderful bones, like the bones of St. Stephen, now out of vogue, have not entirely removed. Don Gaetano Lupidi Lauro fell down suddenly, whilst walking with some of his friends, and died on the spot. The pulse had ceased—the Physician had pronounced him dead—he was laid out and dressed as a corpse, when the image of the Saint was brought and put in contact with the body. Life suddenly returned, with convulsions; he fell into a gentle sleep, and was well next day. Francisco Paulo Fiori, who was totally blind, was totally and suddenly cured. These are merely specimens of innumerable cases. But we cannot vouch for their truth. All that we can vouch for, is "raeding them in a book," written by the Bishop of Macerata, who stakes his character on their truth.

But then we can say no more of the other cases—the Mesmeric and the Mormonite. We can vouch for noue of them personally, though they have both bishops and apostles to vouch for them. We have them all upon testimony. But even suppose we had personal knowledge of their truth, we could not communicate our own experience to our readers. They could only receive the report upon our testimony; and therefore, in so far as the evidence is concerned, it is to the reader quite as conclusive as if we ourselves had witnessed all these miracles performed. The King and Queen of Naples are devout worshippers of Saint Philomena. One of the King's ministers holds, as her minister also, the keys of the shrine. The first people in Naples, as well as the last, believe in the truth of the cures performed. Some doubt, and some are offended, as rival monks often are, when their favorite saints are eclipsed by some new upstart, and the worshippers of the Virgin sometimes complain that she is outdone by a saint who has been idling away her time in heaven for 1500 years. But still the pilgrimages continue to Mugnano; and if people did not, derive any sensible benefit from them, the saint must speedily lose her reputation. But she has kept it up for forty years.

Well, what sort of conclusion are we to draw from these three species of miracles? If the reader remembers our article on the "Universal Apostacy," (No. 397), perhaps he remembers our allusion to the three great propagandas of modern times—Philosophy, Popery, and Protestantism. A certain wonderful book speaks of three propagandas working miracles in the latter days. Well, Mesmerism belongs to Philosophy; Monachism is Popery; Mormonism belongs to Protestantism. Here they all are. Mesmerism points to Nature; it is science without a soul. Mormonism looks to God without Nature; it is faith without knowledge—spirit without a suitable clothing. Popery looks to the deified children of God, as partakers of the Divine Nature, without due reverence, either to God or Nature—a division that bespeaks corruption, symbolized by old bones. There is truth in each, and defect in each, and each is capable of satisfying the human heart. But Mormonism has certainly the precedence in point of dignity and reverence. Each, however is deceptive and not to be depended on. They promise more than they perform; and bewilder as much, or more, than they gratify; for neither is yet clothed with the spirit of Charity that believeth all things. It believes its own works, and sneers at its rival's. It is therefore impure; but not more impure, nor less legitimate, less moral, or less religious, than any other species of sectarianism. Nothing is pure but universal brotherhood, for that is charity; and he alone has found the truth who believeth all things—that is, definitely or indefinitely—without committing himself by vouching for particular details.

For the Frontier Guardian:

Praise to the Savior.

TUNE—Star in the East.

BY ALEX H. BAKER.

Come gather, ye Saints, to the place that's appointed,
To ZION, the city, on the "sides of the North!"
That ye may be washed, and with oil be anointed,
And be ready for things, that are fast rolling forth.

CHORUS: Praise to the Savior, ascended to Heaven,
Thereby "giving gifts;" to the children of men;
The bonds of death and the grave hath he riven,
Ascended: From whence he's returning again.

Although we must pass through temptation and trouble,
Yet he will repay, all our toil, care and pain;
The "earth will be burned," and the "wicked as stubble!"
When the Savior shall stand, on Mount Olivet again.

CHORUS—Praise to the Savior, &c., &c.

In order to obtain, a far better resurrection,
The Prophets of Israel all passed through the same;
Our "CAPTAIN" through suffering, arrived at perfection;
Glory and honor be, ascribed to his name!

CHORUS—Praise to the Savior, &c., &c.

Come on then thou "trials," we'll hail thee with gladness,
Although thou shouldst seem, as the mountains in height;
For, our Savior will banish, all sorrow and sadness,
And sin, will be driven, into "Eternal night!"

CHORUS—Praise to the Savior, &c., &c.

From the Lady's Book.

Independence.

BY MRS. CHARLOTTE HOVEY.

True independence of character does not consist in uttering unpalatable truths indifferently, or in carrying uncouth-looking bundles through public promenades; for true politeness never unnecessarily wounds the sensitiveness of any one, and a refined self-respect will prevent our elaborately displaying a necessity to labor.

I do not deny that there is virtue in performing either of these duties when they are duties. But to seek them in order to establish a reputation for independence, is a weakness; and that such a charater is often thus established, at least to the owner's satisfaction, is a proof on what slight grounds self-love can assume to itself a virtue. There is no more sublime virtue than moral independence. It is more comprehensive than may at first be supposed. It enables one to adhere to the path of duty, though he walk alone; to follow truth, lead where it may; to resist the most alluring temptations to integrity and veracity. It pre-supposes the highest self-respect and esteem, and this can only be founded on real worth. For, however much the individual may deceive others, he may not deceive himself. He does not really respect himself for any good that is not in him.

We have glanced at the manifestations of this virtue; let us consider the mode of cultivating it. Each individual character is a unite—a perfect whole—no link in a chain—a complete work of the Creator. Mankind, taken "en masse," may be called a step in creation—the connecting link between the lower animals and higher intelligences. But individuals must not be so considered. Each charaeter has impulses, powers, desires, which must be guided, cultivated, repressed, but not violently wrested from their natural course, nor wholly disregarded. Parents should regard, and, as much as they innocently can, conform to any marked characteristic of a child. This may be manifested in trivial ways, about its dress or amusements; but it should not be violently thwarted or carelessly neglected. I once heard a parent lamenting the defection of one of his two sons. "I have always managed them exactly alike," said he; "they always pursued the same studies, enjoyed the same pleasures, and even in my careful impartiality, dressed alike. And, oh! they are as different as light and darkness." I would not add to the parent's grief by showing his error; but it would be very easy for a disinterested person to trace the effect to his "careful impartiality."

We often observe in neglected children a decision of character, and general vigor of mind, wanted in more favored classes. This is because they are allowed to act out what is in them. Their freedom is favorable to developement, an instance of the glorious principle of compensation. And can we not obtain this great desideratum without the accompanying evils of neglect? With adults there are restrictions quite as numerous and powerful as with children. Fashion, rules of society, public opinion, are often fetters and chains to the mind. It is melancholy to see humanity, as it were, always run into the same mould, repeating itself; to see multitudes of people seeking to dress, and look, and talk like some model. God protests powerfully against such conformity in the diversity of features and inclinations he has given us, and thus saves us from a perfect monotony. Outward restraints produce but outward virtue. All restrictions should come from within—from strict principle, refined imagination, and a heart warmed by love to God and man. Thanks to the irrepressible vigor of the nature we have received, it cannot be wholly enslaved by any "powers that be." And the conservative is often shocked by the erratic course of certain minds.

Every one who steps out of a beaten path to promulgate what he believes true has the germ of a great principle within him. He is doing just what he ought to do—following out his own peculiar ideas; and this is the way the whole race of minds is benefited. In this way has the mass of human thought been gathered. Sir Isaac Newton was absorbed in philosophy and mathematics, and the results have blessed the world. Some minds have employed all their energy in the contemplation of the history of nations, of the principles of governments, and hence have arisen systems of politics. Others have been wrapped in music, and the first outpourings of human feeling have been resolved into a science. Each has some vocation—let him follow it out to perfection. "He who seeks to imitate another despoils himself of his own beauty to come short of another man's. We should strive to render ourselves as much as possible independent of others, and of circumstances—to multiply resources of happiness within ourselves. It is pitiable to see one cast down by a rainy day, or a slight disappointment, or even sickness or deprivation. A love of reading will rob solitude of its wearisomeness, and disarm mightier evils of their power. A mind stored with knowledge will never want interesting topics of thought to beguile arduous or monotonous duties. A love of poetry and beauty is a powerful assistant in attracting the mind to what is pleasant and profitable in one's lot. There are ample means of happiness in the cultivation of our higher faculties: these are never failing, constantly increasing, and common to all. And if, by being true to this trust, we have within our own minds the source of our happiness and improvement, we are sufficiently independent.

The Cynic.

The Cynic is one who never sees a good quality in a man, and never fails to see a bad one. He is the human owl, vigilant in darkness, and blind to light, mousing for vermin and never seeing noble game. The Cynic put all human actions into two classes—openly bad, and secretly bad. All virtue and generosity and disinterestedness are merely the appearance of good, but selfish at the bottom. He holds that no man does a good thing except for profit. The effect of his conversation upon your feelings is to chill and sear them; to send you away sour and morose. His criticism and inuendoes fall indiscriminately upon every loving thing like frost upon flowers. If a man is said to be pure and chaste, he will answer: Yes, in the day time. If a woman is pronounced virtuous, he will reply: Yes, on Sundays. Mr. B—— has joined the Church: Certainly, the election are coming on. The minister of the Gospel is called an example of diligence: It is his trade. Such a man is generous: Of other men's money. This man is obliging: To lull suspicion, and cheat you. That man is upright: Because he is green. Thus his eye strains out every good quality, and takes in only the bad. To him religion is hypocrisy; honesty, a preparation for fraud; virtue, only want of opportunity; and undeniable purity, and asceticism. The live-long day he will coolly sit with sneering lip, uttering sharp speeches in the quietest manner; and in polished phrase, transfixing every character which is presented: His words are softer than oil, yet they are drawn swords.—[H. W. Beecher.

How to be Useful---Eloquent Extract.

A spirit of fault-finding, an unsatiated temper—a constant irritability—little inequalities in the look, the temper of the manner, a brow cloudy and dissatisfied will more neutralize all the good you can do, and render life anything but a blessing. It is in such gentle and quiet virtues as forbearance and meekness, that the happiness and usefulness of life consists, for more than brilliant eloquence, in splendid talent, or illustrious deeds, that shall send the name to future time.

It is the bubling stream which flows gently; the little rivulet which glides through the meadow, and runs along day and night by the farm house, that it is useful rather than the swollen flood or the waring cataract. Niagara excites our wonder, and we stand amazed at the power and greatness of God there, as he pours it from the hollow of his hand. But one Niagara is enough for a continent or a world; while the same world needs thousands and tens of thousands of silver fountains and gentle flowing rivulets that water every farm, and meadow, and garden, and shall flow on every day and every night with gentle and quiet beauty. So with the acts of our lives. It is not by great deeds only, like that of Howard—not by great suffering only, like those of martyrs—that good is to be done; it is by the daily and quiet virtues of life—the Christian temper, the meek forbearance, the spirit of forgivness in the husband, the wife, the mother, the brother, the sister, the neighbor, that good is to be done; and thus we may be useful.—[Rev. E. Barnes.

A rare literary curiosity is noticed by the Philadelphia North American as being in the possession of Mr. E. Waterman, of that city—It is a vellum volume done in the year 1200, long before the art of printing was discovered, and the type-like clearness, regularity and compactness of the lettering, as well as the exquisite delicacy and beauty of the ornamental writing in colors, which illuminates, every page of the book, constitute it one of the most remarkable relics that have descended to us from the times anterior to types and printers.

A promise is a just debt, which you must take care to pay, for honor and honesty are the security.

Mesmerism, Mormonism, and Monachism.

An article appeared in the Family Herald, a leading Journal published in London, under date of March 15th, 1851, headed as above. Our readers will find the same on our first page this issue. Mesmerism and Monachism, we have nothing to do with; they have their own advocates and defenders; but being identified with the class of people called Mormons, and our interests blended with their's in common; it becomes our duty to correct, several misrepresentations set forth in the remarks made by the Editor relative to them in that article. The Editor of the Herald, Mr. Briggs, would have the public believe, that he is a liberal and charitable man—perhaps he is, he gives a great degree of credit to the three isms; more especially to Mormonism, for the common effort made to realize a royal road to the alleviation of the bodily ailments of humanity. He proceeds to lay before his readers, different cures effected through the laying on of hands, and the anointing with Oil in the name of the Lord,—gives credence to the fact and sums up the evidence in favor of Mormonism, at the expense of the other two. Mr. Briggs may be an honest man, and a gentleman; but we are sorry for one thing, and that is, that he should in some things, so greatly err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God. And as an instance of the fact, we quote his own words which are as follows:

"Mormonism looks to God, without nature,—it is faith without knowledge—spirit without a suitable clothing." Whether the Editor of the Herald, has reference to drugs as being nature, a classical education in a college being knowledge,—the two combined together being suitable clothing: or, that he means something else, as not for us to say; but since he has left his language shrouded in a figure, every person is at liberty to put their own construction upon it, and we shall ours. Respecting the Mormons looking to God without nature, is incorrect. The Saints of Latter-days, look to God in the same manner that the ancient Saints did, viz: by believing that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that deligently seek him; they look to God as their Creator—the earth and its fulness, which the Editor calls Nature, we call creation, or the works of the Creator. For us to look to the Supreme ruler of the universe without nature, would be at once admitting the fact of our non-existence, because our earthly Tabernacle is a part and portion of the work of his hands, and the scripture says: "God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshipped as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, &c." We owe our being here to God, and through the channel that he hath ordained, we look to him as our Creator, because we are his creatures. The following we quote from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of our Church, which is a revelation of the will of the Lord to his people in these last days, which reads thus:

"And inasmuch as ye do these things with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts and countenances, &c. Verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this, the fulness of the earth is yours, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth, whether for food, or for raiment, or for houses, or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards, yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof: is made for the use and benefit of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and enliven the soul."

The two foregoing paragraphs, the first from the Acts of the Apostles of former days,—the latter from the Revelations of God in Latter-days; clearly show the manner in which the Saints of the last days view Jehovah and his works, or nature if you please to call it. We view the great Ruler of this earthly planet, just as he should be viewed and worshipped; his works and word we appreciate, and his commandments we endeavor to observe, Mr. Brigg's views to the contrary notwithstanding. From the second clause of his article, quoted in the preceding part of our remarks, we glean, that this modern Critic would have the readers of his periodical believe, that Mormonism is "Faith without Knowledge." Perhaps Mr. Briggs did not know any better; therefore we extend charity toward the man, for his good intentions; but for the benefit of our readers we will here say, "that faith without works is dead, as the body without the spirit."

The Mormons believe that faith is the first principle of revealed religion. Faith arises in the mind by evidence, if the evidence, or testimony is received, the mind operates upon the physical energies of the body, which produces a manifestation of the faith of the individual by works, and thus is faith made manifest by works; hence through works the party concerned receives a knowledge of the truth, or falsity of the evidence the mind imbibed. For example, an apple is introduced, we are told the apple is sweet; we believe the testimony advanced, because we know nothing to the contrary; yet, we are ignorant of its property, until we bring it in contact with the organ of taste; this action of mind and body, places us in the possession of a fact whereby we may know whether our informer told us the truth or not. Well, even so with the doctrine of Christ. Jesus says: if any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. We believed the testimony of the manifestations of heaven; this faith wrought in us obedience to the ordinances of the Gospel of peace, under the hands of a legal administrator, whereby we came in possession of the truth of their statements, and know that the doctrine we embraced was in very deed, that represented to us.

Now, Mr. Editor, here is our testimony, we do know that Mormonism is not what you represent it to be, when you say that it is faith without knowledge. Faith leads to the fountain of knowledge, and hundreds, and thousands of candid, upright, and honest people, according to the Editor's own testimony, have drank freely out of her pure and unadulterated springs, whereby they are enabled to bear testimony to the same thing we have testified to. Jesus said on one occasion, "he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, &c."

What are the Saints doing in England? The Editor of the Herald informs you, that the sick is healed, the blind see, the deaf hear, the cholera checked, &c. &c., and yet he does not know; and because he is ignorant of the cause of these marvellous works, he would have others to be so also. The Editor and his company, are blind leaders of the blind, and both will fall into the ditch. Knowledge is power; these works could not be accomplished without it; hence the Editor's declaration falls to the ground as futile and unfounded.

"Mormonism belongs to Protestantism," the Editor of the Herald says; but his ignorance no doubt led him into this vortex of error, as well as into many others. Mormonism is the truths of heaven, or the Gospel of the Son of God communicated to earth through the ministration of an holy Angel; and it claims no affinity, to either Mesmerism, Monachism, Protestantism or any other ism extant; it stands independent of them all, firmly based upon the revelations of the Most High, and the testimony of Jesus his Son.

The clothing that Mormonism wears, we are satisfied does not suit the multitude, but like her master, the Church decorates herself with the garb of humility—her covering is the mantle of charity. Those who wish to come under these two, may find shelter within their graceful folds; while those who are otherwise inclined, may remain as they are, and we shall find no fault.

Something New, Editors turned Prophets.

In the St. Louis Daily Union, of the 21st ult., we notice a long, and elaborate Leader, headed, "Visions and Revelations—Joe Smith eclipsed!" The editor seems to be highly gratified; and pleasingly complimentary, on the Theological tactics of Elder Orson Hyde, editor of this paper. Hear what he says:

We admire the theological tactics of Elder Orson Hyde. He is evidently a skilful athlete, and has studied in the most approved schools of the day. He would have the saints judge for themselves in all conflicting and rival claims to their confidence, like the one now instanced, but woe to them if they form any other judgment than one favorable to him. He is a sensible man, and is undoubtedly the true prophet, whatever the partizans of Gladden and Strang may allege in favor of their spiritual guides. We are decidedly in favor of the apostolicity and mission of Brother Hyde. Hath he not seen a vision, and besides is he not an editor? This latter preponderating advantage over his rivals, settles the point with us. Never before the light of the nineteenth century dawned upon the world, had an editor a place among the prophets. We are anxious for the apotheosis of at least one of our fraternity, for we are aware that the great majority of us stand but a very poor chance. We therefore declare decidedly and emphatically for Brother Hyde; and are ready to maintain his cause with all the logic and eloquence at our command.

Wonder if some of our Elders in that city won't have a candidate for baptism soon? The next article but one, in the Union, reads as follows: "We have all along predicted a heavier overflow of the river, and one of longer duration than seemed to be generally apprehended." Can any one forbid water after such a stride into the prophetic arena; and the thing predicted having come to pass? We think none should. If the Editor evinces a humble and sincere disposition,—willing to reform in every instance that he has erred; Please deal with him Philip-like forthwith; then we shall have a yoke of the fraternity, to draw the balance into their proper places. Truly, this is an age of wonders!

We Guess,

We Know the Liar, who gave information to the St. Joseph Gazette man, and it ill becomes his STANDING. There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed, and hid that shall not be known.

To Whom it May Concern.

We are in receipt of two communications from G. S. L. City Post Office, which states, that certain individuals who reside in that section of country, subscribed for our paper, but do not receive it. If those parties will write to this Office stating, when, and where they subscribed; also, the amount paid, and to whom; their papers shall be forwarded to them upon receipt of their letter; but we are sorry to say, that we have reason to believe that many leave this Frontier without ever giving notice of their removal; and while they may be accusing us in the Valley, the whole of the trouble probably arises from their own neglect.

Therefore, let it be understood, that while we hold ourselves responsible for any delinquency, or neglect on our part; our subscribers should remember that they hold one end of the chain themselves.

Cholera in St. Louis.

The St. Louis Republican of the 12th inst., says: that their latest reports exhibit a decidedly improved condition in the health of the City; and that in a day or two, there is every probability that the Cholera will take its final leave. Without the prevalence of this disease, the interments show a very moderate mortality for this season of the year.

To Our Patrons and Friends.

This number closes the first six months of the third Volume of the Guardian, and we cannot but express our gratitude for the liberal patronage extended to us by our friends and brethren in this County, and throughout the States. In looking over our subscription list, we notice the names of several we have to erase, in consequence of the term paid for, having expired; but we trust that upon receipt of this number, they will either forward to us, or pay to our agents, the requisite amount to warrant a continuance of the paper which will afford us much pleasure.

More Indian Outrage -- Forty-five Head of Cattle Lost by a Party of Oregon Emigrants -- the Pawnees Considered Accessory to the Stampede.

Since our last Issue, a company of Oregon Emigrants from Peoria County, Illinois, and some from Wisconsin; returned to this place. They crossed the Missouri River at Ferryville, on the 10th of June, numbering seventeen wagons.

This company proceeded on their journey prosperously, until they crossed the Horne; at which place, they were surrounded by a large body of Pawnees, some of whom were on horseback, others on mules, and on foot. Before the Indians reached the camp, they raised their Yell, or War-hoop, showing their hostile feeling; and their determination to molest the pacific travelers.

Upon coming up to the camp, they demanded two cows from the company; but by parleying with them, they concluded to take one cow, and one sack of flour; and abandon their hostile intentions. The company complied with their request, and gave them the choice of selection; which the Indians insisted on having. The company then took up their line of march, and got along well as far as Big Beaver Creek, one hundred and four miles from Winter Quarters, at which place they arrived about noon; (the date we have been unable to learn) this stream not being fordable, they commenced operations for bridging it, and had to remain there all night. About ten o'clock that night the cattle took a stampede; several of the company whom we have seen, say; that they are satisfied the Indians were the cause of it, as they had seen them several times on the way, prowling round among the brush, and following them up. Next day, the Red skins made their appearance at camp, and proferred their services to recover the cattle, on condition that the company would pay them handsomely for it; the latter agreed to these conditions, and three days after, the Indians brought back ten head, for which the emigrants paid them fifteen dollars worth in provisions, and five in money.

The total number of cattle lost, were one hundred and twenty, out of which sixty-four were recovered; part by the Indians, and the remainder by persons belonging to the company.

One of the emigrants is now in our Office, as we are writing this article, who says; that out of the remaining fifty six head, they have been able to recover eleven more, making in all forty-five head that they cannot find. Ten wagons of the company, came back to this county; being unable to proceed any further this season on account of their loss; the other seven joined our last company from this place for Salt Lake.

The repeated aggressions, of the Omaha, Ottoe, and Pawnee Indians, on this Frontier, and on the plains, should enlist the special attention of the General Government, in Washington City; and we think, prompt, and energetic measures ought to be entered into by the Legislative Department there, to suppress these high-handed acts of the sons of the forest, on the property of American citizens; so that the honest, upright, and persevering Emigrant, may not have his enterprizing spirit broken, and his hard earned effects destroyed by these desperadoes, without the least shadow of reclamation, or remuneration whatever for his loss.

The Agent, Major J. E. Barrow, says: that it is beyond his control to govern or bring these Indians to any thing like conciliatory measures without the aid of an armed force. Here they are, at loose ends, ready to assail every company that may happen to come under their observation; and furthermore, the Major states, though he has repeatedly, made application to several of the Forts for assistance; his efforts have failed to secure any.

We sincerely hope, that something will be done soon, and that effectually too; so as to insure the safety, and success of the Westward-bound Emigrant.

News from the Elders.

By the two last mails we received several communications from the traveling elders, who left this place for the States and Canada, early last Spring. Elders Ross and Murray, writes from West Elizabeth, Pa., where they have been hospitably received—their words believed, and quite a number are about being baptised in that section. They complain however of some Saints in their travels being addicted to frequent theatres, and other public places too often; and which in its tendency they say, throws an unfavorable influence around the cause of righteousness, and truth.

Elders Bullock and Cutler, wrote from Pittsburgh, giving a detail of their labors among the Rigdonites. They have also baptised quite a number. Elders Caudland and Brown, are in the State of New York, but have not been quite so successful as the aforementioned gentlemen.

We shall continue from time to time, to notice through the Guardian, the progress made by the elders on their travels through the States, and any matter of interest received from them, of a public character shall not escape unnoticed.

A Gale.

One of the severest gales ever known in this section of country, passed over our town on Wednesday evening, the 16th inst., between the hours of seven and eight o'clock. In aspect it threatened the demolition of houses and the entire destruction of crops. The wind blew terrific—the thunder and lightning was tremendous, while the rain fell in torrents for about half an hour. Although no material injury has been sustained by the citizens of this town, except the unroofing of several houses; the damage done to timber and grain, must be considerable in the aggregate.

We understand that one or two houses, through the roof being blown off, caught fire, and the entire effects of the parties were consumed; leaving them in a state of destitution.

The people of Ferryville, and Council Point, shared in common with the rest; miles of fences were thrown down through the violence of the wind, leaving the crops exposed to the mercy of the numerous herds of cattle, ranging around them at this season of the year. Our farmers are busily engaged in repairing their fences, so as to secure their crops from any further damage.

Clear the Track for Turkish Fashion.

As the Ladies of Kanesville, may not thoroughly understand the new style of dress, introduced in the East by the Belles, called A la Turk or Bloomers. Permit us briefly to describe it. The Panteletts from the waist down to the ankles are cut quite full, terminating in a band three inches wide, from which a ruffle of proportionate depth falls over the feet. The body of the frock must fit tight, and the skirts extend to the knee. The head dress is a neatly arranged turban, of fine material, encirled with a string of pearls. Red slippers complete the costume.

A Word in Season.

While pondering over our latest exchanges, we notice in almost every paper, something said about Cholera.

Some Journals chronicle the number of deaths in their vicinity; while others by advancing strong reasons, are endeavoring to enforce upon the public mind, the necessity of external cleanliness as a preventative. Cleanliness is recommendable in all things, and in truth is a part of Godliness. Paul, classes uncleanness among the lusts of the flesh; and besides, experience should prove to every man and woman, that purity when fully carried out, is conducive to health, and longevity in a great degree.

We would suggest to the Saints, the propriety of remembering, that it is their imperative duty, not only to be clean outwardly; but also to be particular in cultivating purity of heart. Zion's God reigns, and he, who by a careless indifference, neglects the performance of his duty toward his God,—his Family and brethren, may not expect to realize much benefit, from all the external appearances he may try to make. Virtue's chaste and lovely root, must be planted in the heart, before her pure and holy fruit, can shed its hallowed influence over our lives. The Savior said on one occasion to his disciples: "Except your righteousness, exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Cleanse First that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.

He alone is safe, who, because of love and attachment to truth, and righteousness; regulates his course by the revelations that God has given, for the salvation of his Saints in these last days; and should we be found a transgressor it only proves our weakness, folly, and slavishness to sin and lust. He whom truth makes free, is free indeed. The laws of heaven are immutable—they are revealed for man's benefit—for his salvation and exaltation in time, and eternity; and wise is he, who knows the will of his maker, and does it; on him the second death has no power; but he is eligible to glory and honor, in the mansions prepared for the righteous.

This desolating scourge, that is vexing the nations, and tearing asunder the most endearing ties; is only a manifestation of the displeasure of him, who cannot look upon sin but with detestation and abhorence. We offer here, a prescription as a preventative: observe the "Word of Wisdom"—deal justly with your neighbor—your neighbor is us that bears the image, and likeness of his maker; love mercy, and exercise it—walk in obedience to all other requirements of the Gospel of Peace, and you shall be saved.

The wages of Sin is Death; but the reward of righteousness, is eternal life, and exaltation in the presence of God.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Horrible to Relate--Much More so to Experience.

On Wednesday the 16th inst., myself and Wilkinson Hewitt, crossed the Missouri River for the purpose of shooting a deer; the clouds began to look squally, and in aspect indicated that a storm was approaching. We consulted together, and thought our best move would be, to return to the river, and get across before the gale could get up to us. We accordingly made for the River, and started from the banks entertaining no danger, until we got off from the shore,—the storm came sooner than we anticipated, and overhauled us in the middle of the River,—the wind lashed—the waves rolled—the thunder pealed, and the lightning streaked; the thunder sounded like so many peals from a ten Pounder.

The skiff filled with water, and there we were; Hewitt turned the skiff over—I swam round to the bow as quick as I could, and stopped his rolling the skiff, then he crawled on the bottom of it, when a wave struck him and knocked him off. He and his dog passed off on my left, some six feet, and the waves covered both of them. Hewitt screamed once or twice and sunk to rise no more. I wended my way down stream through the storm about fourteen miles, in the dead hour of night, until I providentially was enabled to make for the shore about two o'clock in the morning. I tied my skiff, and dug a hole in the sand, and camped there till morning; after the sun got up, so as to warm and strengthen me a little, I turned my boat over, bailed her out, and started for Council Point; which place I arrived at, about nine o'clock in the morning.

Yours in haste,
MOSES MORSE.

Notice.

The proceedings of the two meetings, held by the citizens of this town lately will appear in our next number. In the meantime, let the heads of every family, and all others concerned, remember, that the subject matter is; Cleanliness. Sweep the streets before your doors and lots to the centre, and burn up in the morning all the trash collected, that will burn, and all obnoxious matter that might raise an unpleasant smell or effluvia, in, or around your dwellings is expected to be removed forthwith.

Left for the Valley of the G. S. Lake.

Mr. Kinkead's Nephew, of Kinkead & Livingston, Merchants, Salt Lake, left Austin on the 5th inst., for the Valley, in company with Major Holeman, Son and Nephew.

Major Holeman, is United States Agent for the Utahs; we think the inhabitants of the Valley, will be pleased with him, as he bears by report the character of a gentleman.

We wish him much success in his new appointment.

Thomas S. Williams and company, left here on the 23d inst.

Kanesville in Bloom.

We saw her! Who? A Bloomer!! What did she look like? She looked like A —— Turk, only a hundred per cent more natural, and graceful. What next?

Health.

The citizens of this place, never experienced a season more healthy than this. We have not had a single case of Cholera up to the present, and but very few cases of sickness of any kind.

RECOVERED.—The body of Wilkinson Hewitt, who was capsized into the river, by the recent gale, was found near Trading Point.

A communication from G. A. Smith, Iron County, Utah Territory, will appear in our next.

Distressing Calamity.

Through the politeness of Mr. Jackson of this place, we are privileged to peruse a letter from a brother of his, who lives in Oregon, Holt County, Missouri. The contents of which are as follows:

"It is with pain, that I take up my pen to inform you of one of the most terrible calamities that I ever witnessed. About nine o'clock on Thursday evening, a storm came up suddenly, which proved disastrous in its issue to several of our citizens. A cloud came over our little village; it began to rain slowly, and a few minutes after, the lightning struck the Hotel in the corner of the Bar-room. There were eight men in the room, who were so badly burnt that five out of the number died, some of them in two hours, while others survived till next morning. The names of the whole number are as follows:

F. A. Pollock, James D. Fortune, James M. Thorp, William Job, a stranger; Daniel Sipes Jr., John Sikes, of St. Joseph, Mo.; Mr. House, a stranger; Thomas Edwards, a stranger.

Edwards, Sikes, and Thorp, are alive yet; but the Physicians say they have no hopes of their recovery.

There were four barrels of Brandy standing behind the door, one on top of the other, and from all accounts, the electric fluid must have run down among them, as all the barrels bursted, and the stairs fell against the door, so that it could not be opened. The Brandy was knee deep all over the floor, and in a solid sheet of flame; the men had to make their escape by breaking out at the window, and when they had got out they were all on fire; and as soon as possible, assistance, was rendered them, their clothes were tora off, and some of them it is said that they lost their skin with their clothes, having peeled off like the bark of a tree.

The Brandy burnt so rapidly, that there was no chance of putting the fire out; but we all helped to save things that were in the bed-rooms. The sufferers were all in the bar-room eating oysters, and playing cards, when the dreadful catastrophe happened.

RAILWAY.—The first ground was broken for Great Salt Lake City and mountain Railway on Wednesday last; contracts are made for the sleepers and rails; and labor is now wanted to bring the road into immediate use. The whole track is to be constructed of wood, and as soon as it can be completed, preparations may commence for the immediate progress of the Temple. If every Saint would do his duty, three months need not transpire before the rock are coming for the walls; what will you do?—[Deseret News.

BOTANIC PHYSICIAN.

DR. J. WARE offers his professional services, to the citizens of Kanesville and vicinity. Having received an education in the Botanic Institute, Cincinnati, Ohio; and also fifteen years experience in treating the diseases of the West with Botanic Medicines—which are perfectly free from the deleterious effects produced by the use of mineral medicines; he flatters himself, by strict attention to his business he cannot fail to secure a liberal share of public patronage.

To those who may wish his advice, or entrust cases to his care; he would simply say, that what he may the honor of knowing, he has in no case violated.

Effects of the Flood on the Upper Mississippi.

We take the following from our Iowa exchanges, received this morning:

The Burlington Telegraph, of June 7th, says:

We have sad accounts from the interior of the devastations wrought by the late flood. All the towns on the Des Moines river, excepting a portion of Farmington, as far up as Fort Des Moines, are under water to a depth of from four to ten feet. The town of Lowaville is almost entirely destroyed, eighteen houses have been carried off at last accounts, and the remainder seriously injured. The wide overflow of the bottoms has destroyed hundreds of farms, leaving many families utterly destitute, bereft of everything they possessed, and without means to enter upon their accustomed avocations. Worst of all, the depreciation of their lands, now known to be subject to overflows, will add greatly to their calamities.

The rain along the Skunk and Iowa rivers both of which are swollen to many feet beyond any previous rise, is equal in proportion to that of the Des Moines. Mills and dams without number have been washed away, farms inundated, and hundreds and thousands of cattle and other stock drowned.

The same mournful accounts reach us from the northern portion of the State. The Mill and dam at Cascade, have been carried away entirely, and the large Mill, one of the best in the State, on Catfish Creek, near Dubuque, has been damaged to the extent of $5000. Other mills in the same vicinity have been washed down, and thousands of bushels of flour swept away.

Added to these have been the terrors of the tornado at Fairfield and Mount Pleasant. Truly, it would seem that all the elements had been combined, in order that no portion of the State should escape visitation.

The direct losses to sufferers in various regions of the State, by reason of high waters, may be set down perhaps at not less than $1,000,000. The various interests of all classes will experience serious detriment, from these misfortunes, for several months to come.

The Hawk-Eye, of 5th, has the following:

Disasters at the North.

The Dubuque Tri-weekly Herald of last Thursday, contains a melancholy account of loss of life. In another column we have recorded the sweeping away of mills, bridges, &c., in that country by the late flood. In addition that paper contains the particulars of the drowning of a Lady by the name of Alloway. She and her husband were an elderly couple, living on the banks of the Maquoketa. On the Sunday night previous, they were aroused at about 2 o'clock by the rush of waters into their house. By that time there were four feet of water on the lower floor. They fled immediately from the house, but were overwhelmed by the flood before they could reach a place of safety. The husband seized hold of a bush with one hand and with the other supporting his already drowning wife. The wife soon became exhausted and unable to make further exertions, sank in death and her lifeless body was torn from the weakened grasp of her companion. He was enabled to keep his hold until morning, when he was rescued from his perilous situation by the neighbors. His dwelling al its contents, was swept away, together with a flouring Mill of which he was the owner.

Every bridge and dam, between Eads' Grove and Dubuque, were reported gone. A saw mill on the south fork of the Maquoketa above Eads' gone. The dam of Schemmel's Factory on the north fork, materially injured. Simms' mill on Little Maquoketa is reported gone, and the dam at Hawley's Carding mill is swept away. On account of the destruction of bridges and the bad roads, the extent of the disasters could not be ascertained.

Interesting from Mexico.

Commotion in Congress—Winds of the Treasury—The Tehuantepec Treaty, &c.

We have received from the City of Mexico news to 24th May. The papers which arrived a week ago from that City contained information which has not been continued. On this subject the Trait d'Union says:—"We were completely mistaken in considering as an accomplished fact the question of extraordinary powers. The solution did not take place. After the facts related in our bulletin, the House of Deputies and the Senate did not agree. The House of Deputies rejected the proposition of the Senate, and the latter, by a vote of 27 to 13, did not adopt the project of the lower house. This conflict lasted till midnight, when the extraordinary session was closed. The extraordinary powers have, then, been rejected, but Congress has authorized the government to find, by all possible means, though on certain conditions, $250,000 every month, for its expenses, till the convention of another extraordinary session."

The Monitor Republicano speaks as follows of the closing of the session:—

The Capital of the Republic, on the night of the 23d, was witness to one of the most unheard of acts in the history of our Congresses. Congress, in closing its sessions, has exposed the nation to the fate of perishing for the total want of resources to carry on the government. In vain we endeavor to justify this conduct, for the honor of the nation; good faith and patriotism alike resist the effort, and compel us to present to the country a view of the events of that memorable day, when bad faith and party spirit made use of all their artifices and all their sophisms.

The following is a translation of the remarks made by the President on the occasion:—

To explain that which is now going on, gentlemen, would only be to repeat what all the world knows. The Government has assumed no powers of any kind; the Chamber of Deputies itself—the popular Chamber—suggested that project, repeating it whenever it had an opportunity. I regret, gentlemen, the blindness of those who did not see the impropriety of placing obstacles in the way of an administration born of the law, and which aspires to preserve intact the fundamental character. I have never believed that I should find, in this proposition a bed of down. I am resolved to meet everything that fate may prepare for me: but I am firm in my determination that all those should meet a just punishment who endeavor to violate the Constitution, and thus bring redicule on republican institutions. The laws will be maintained; and when, gentlemen, you return to this august station, you will be saluted by a government sustained by the compact which unites all Mexicans—a government preserving peace and complying with the duties which the nation has imposed on it. I should not conclude without returning thanks to the Senators and Deputies who have honored the executive with their confidence. The Almighty, who watches over the fate of nations, will preserve ours. I hope it in all sincerity. I have spoken.

A few days before the adjournment of Congress, the government presented to the Chamber of Deputies official despatches from Commandant General of Sonora, announcing that an expedition for the invasion of California was in process of organization at San Diego. The Trait d'Union places no credit in this statement; but it says it is ready to prove that if Mexico persists in her present course, Sonora, Lower California, and perhaps Tehauntepec, will be invaded, and that the torrents once let loose, all efforts to restrain it will be useless.

GOLD IN MAINE—GREAT EXCITEMENT.—Gold as rich as that from the mines of California is said to have been recently found in Maine, and in a portion of the state on the borders of the line which seperates it from Canada, heretofore considered as a wilderness. So great is the excitement created by the discovery, that raftsmen are said to have abandoned their logs, and the farmers their shovels and hoes, to engage in searching for the precious metal.

The Wheat Crop.

Amid the desolations of the late flood, and the rather gloomy prospect of getting a corn crop to stand, it is cheering to the farmer to look out upon his wheat field at this time. We learn from several intelligent men that the prospect of a good crop of wheat was never fairer in northern Iowa than at present. The rainy season has brought it forward finely, and it will probably be safe before its great enemy, hot weather, overtakes it.—Dubuque Herald.

The Crops.

We have formed the opinion, from reports by travelers recently arrived from the country, that the damage done to the Valley in the destruction of crops, though severe, is not as general and irreparable as has been apprehended. The wheat crop, even in the bottom lands, is said to promise well; and continual planting has even kept in a good portion of the corn crop. On the "divide," and high rolling lands, the prospect is good for a full harvest. The loss to individuals, and, in some instances, to wide neighborhoods, is, however, severe: and the aggregate disasters of the season will be felt sensibly in every department of business.—[Keokuk Dispatch.

Destruction of the Crops.

From the information we can get, it seems to be the prevailing opinion that the crops of wheat, corn, oats, &c., in this and the adjoining counties will be very poor this season, in consequence of the general flood. Accounts from all over the State represent the crops in about the same condition as in this immediate vicinity.—[Muscatine (Iowa) Journal.

Early last week, Presidents Young, Kimball, Woodruff, and Benson, General Wells, Marshall Heywood, Ex-Marshall Eldredge, Mayor Grant, Drs. Meeks, Sprague, and Dalyon, G. D. Grant, President John Young, Alderman Felt, Bishop Lorenzo Young, and several others, whose names are not recollected, accompanied Bishop Call on his return to Iron county, visiting the various settlements, and transacting business pertaining to the church, &c. Several families accompanied the mission, for the purpose of strengthening Cedar city. Our best wishes accompany the mission.—[Deseret News, May 3d.

CARSON VALLEY.—We understand that the last of the spring emigration from this place (among whom was Col. Reese,) bound for Carson valley, with bread, flour, and merchandize, passed the ferry on Bear river on the 22d inst. Many of these emigrants have informed us they design trading with travellers at Carson Valley, and returning to our city to winter.

There are some human beings who spend a long life in accumulating riches, by modes of living, ways and means and habits of acting, that men of feeling would not endure a single hour for all they are worth.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK AT SAN FRANCISCO.—A correspondent of the New York Sun writing at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 13th says:

About half-past 3 o'clock this morning, our city was startled by the shock of an earthquake! Men issued frota the shaking houses into the street in consternation.

Hundreds were without meat and money; almost without clothes. The boarders at Jones' Hotel and the Oriental were at breakfast, and so violent was the shock, that they rushed from the table into the street, overturning everything in their way.

The wharves trembled like aspen leaves, and the frame buildings adjoining vibrated some eight or ten inches. The brick buildings were so violently shaken as to induce the belief that they would fall to the ground.

The shock lasted but one instant, but that was long enough to cause the most exciting alarm. The effect seemed to be from southeast to northwest, and was sensibly felt for a distance of two or three miles.

FORT HALL.—A small party, in search of provisions and Indian Goods, arrived from Ft. Hall on the 17th ult., and reported deep snow on the route; also that the Mary's river Indians have been very troublesome about the fort the past winter, killing many of Capt. Grant's cattle, and stealing horses. No news from Oregon, or any other point, at Ft. Hall, since fall.—[Deseret News.

POETRY.

Truth and Honor.

If wealth thou art wooing, or title or fame,
There is that in the doing brings honor or shame.
There is more in the running than winning the race,
This marks thee as worthy, that brands thee as base,
O, then be a man, whatever betide,
Keep truth thy companion, and honor thy guide!

If a king, be thy kingship right royally shown,
And trust to thy subjects to shelter thy throne;
Rely not on the weapons or armies of might,
But on that which endureth laws, loving and right.
Though a king, be a man, and whatever betide,
Keep truth thy companion, and honor thy guide.

If a prince, or a noble, depend not on the blood—
The heart truly noble is that which is good;
If the stain of dishonor encrimson the brow,
Thou art slave to the peasant that sweats at the plow.
Be noble as men; and whatever betide,
Keep truth your companion, and honor your guide.

If a lover be constant, confiding and kind,
For doubting is death to the sensitive mind:
Love's exquisite passion a breath may destroy,
Who soweth in faith expects harvests of joy.
In loving, be men, and whatever betide,
Keep truth your companion, and honor your guide.

If a parent, be firm, yet forgiving and true,
If a child, honor him to whom honor is due,
If rich or if poor, or whatever thou mays't be,
Remember the truthful alone are the free.
Be ever a man, and whatever betide,
Keep truth your companion, and honor your guide.

Then, though sickness may come and misfortune may fall,
The truth in thy bosom surviveth them all;
Truth—Honor—Love—Friendship, no tempest can pale;
They are flowers breathing balm in adversity's gale.
O, the manlike is godlike, and so shall betide,
While truth's thy companion, and honor thy guide.

MISCELLANY.

Joan of Arc.

"My courage try by combat if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex;
Resolve on this: thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate."

SHAKESPEARE. HENRY VI.

Among the extraordinary events that are recorded in history, few can equal those that respect Joan of Arc, who was the immediate cause of that astonishing revolution in the affairs of France, which terminated in the establishment of Charles VII, on the throne of his ancestors, and the final expulsion of the English from that kingdom. At the time this heroine first made her appearance, so low was the power of the Dauphin, that not a single place belonged to him but the town of Orleans alone, which was then closely besieged by the English; nor did there appear the slightest probability that ever he could procure an army strong enough to raise the siege of that city, on which alone his all depended.

Joan of Arc was born at Dauremy, a village near Vancouleurs in Lorraine, about the year 1412. Her father was a peasant, and gave her an education suited to his rank in life. She left her parents at an early age, and became servant at an Inn, where she acquired a complete knowledge of horsemanship. It was here, too, that she first thought of her mission; and it arose from all the news she had heard of the affair in France at the Inn. Her imagination took fire; and she looked upon herself as a girl destined by heaven to rescue France out of the hands of the English.

After much difficulty and application to various individuals, she at length got access to the king, before whom she appeared dressed as a warrior. The king heard her with patience, and then sent her to his Parliament at Poictiers, where she was closely examined by many doctors in theology. At length they determined to advise his majesty to put confidence in her, and attempt to execute what she proposed. She now completed her equipments, appointed Jean Dolon, as famous for his courage as prudence, her squire; and Louis de Comptes her page. She then asked for a sword which had been more than a century in the tomb of a knight, behind the altar of St. Catherine, at Feirbois. She pretended to have a knowledge of it by revelation, and that it was only with this fatal sword she could extirpate the English. She ordered a banner to be made for her, on which was repesented God coming out of a cloud, holding a globe in his hand; it was ornamented with fleurs de lis. Her helmet was surmounted with a plume of white feathers: her horse was also white, and she surpassed all by her beauty, and the skill and address with which she managed him.

On the 29th of April, 1429, Joan of Arc appeared before Orleans with twelve thousand men. She wrote a letter to the Duke of Bedford, then Regent of France, warning him to give up France to its rightful heir; but he English were so enraged at seeing a girl cent to fight them, that they put the heralds in rison. The Count de Durois, who commanded in Orleans, made a sally with all his garrison, in order to facilitate the entry of provisions; and the French, persuaded that this heroine was sent from heaven to their assistance resumed fresh courage, and fought with so much vigor, that she and her convoy entered the town.

The English sent back one of the heralds, of whom she demanded, "What says Talbot," (Sir John Talbot.) And when he informed her that he, as well as all his countrymen, spared no abuse in speaking of her, and declared if they caught her they would burn her; "Go back again," said she "and doubt not but thou wilt bring back with thee thy companion; and tell Talbot, that if he will arm himself, I will do the same, and let him come before the walls of the town, and if he can take me, he may burn me; and if I discomfit him, let him raise the seige, and return unto his own native country."

Soon after her arrival at Orleans, she made an attack on Fort St. Loup, which she carried sword in hand, as well as the bulwarks of St. John, and of the Augustins. In one of the assaults on the English, she received a dangerous wound in the neck, and as a large quantity of blood issued from it, her followers began to fear for her life; but she, to reanimate them said, "It was not blood, but glory, that flowed from her wound."

The siege of Orleans was raised the 8th day of May. Joan of Arc carried the news to the king, and entreated him to come and be crowned at Rheims, then in possession of the English. The siege of Gergeau was next undertaken; when, after laying eight days before the town which was most vigorously defended, Joan of Arc went into the ditch with her standard in her hand, at that part where the English made the most vigorous defence. She was perceived and a heavy stone thrown upon her, which bent her to the ground; notwithstanding which she soon got up, and cried aloud to her companions, "Frenchmen, mount boldly and enter the town, you will find no longer any resistance." Thus was the town won.

She next took possession of Auxerre, Troyes, and Chalons, thus opening for the king the road to Rheims, which city flung open its gates as soon as he appeared before it; and the next day, the 17th of July, he was crowned. The Maid of Orleans assisted at the ceremony in her armour, with her standard in her hand. The judges interrogated her how she dared to come to the coronation with her banner in her hand; to which she answered, That it was but justice that the banner which had its share of the labor, should also share in the honor.

Joan of Arc, having accomplished the object of her mission, raising the siege of Orleans, and crowning the king of Rheims, wished to return to her parents; but he presence inspired too much confidence and had been attended with too great success, for this to be permitted. She therefore accompanied the King to Crepi, to Senlis, and afterwards to Paris. Here she displayed her wonted courage, but received a severe wound. In the siege of Compeigne in 1430, she made a sally at the head of a hundred men over the bridge, and twice repulsed the besiegers; but seeing a very strong reinforcement coming against her, she began to retreat; and although it was late, and she and her troops surrounded, yet having performed prodigies of courage, she disengaged her company, who fortunately re-entered the town. The heroine remained at the rear to facilitate their retreat, and when she wished to enter, the gates were shut; she immediately turned round to he enemies, and charged them with a courage worthy a better fate. She seemed not to expect any assistance, and suspected some treachery, for when she made the sally, she exclaimed, "I am betrayed!" During the time she was defending herself, her horse stumbled, and she fell. This obliged her to surrender herself to Lionel Vasture of Vendome, who gave her up to John of Luxemburgh. This nobleman, forgetting the respect a brave man should show to courage, and regardless of the sex of his captive, basely sold her to the English for ten thousand livres. From the moment she was a prisoner, this heroine was forgotten. The king made no attempts to redeem her; and although at the time he had many English prisoners of the highest rank, he did not exchange one of them for her. This neglect of Joan of Arc will be an eternal blot on the memory of the ingrate Charles VII.

On Joan being made a prisoner, the English indulged in as great rejoicings as if they had conquered the whole kingdom. The Duke of Bedford thought proper to disgrace her, in order to re-animate the courage of his countrymen; and this heroine was condemned at Rouen, by Cauchon, Bishop of Beauvais, and five other French Bishops, to be burnt alive for magic and heresy. During her confinement in prison, she leaped from the top of the tower of Beaurevoir, in hopes of escape; but she was retaken, and her cruel sentence put in execution on the 24th of May, 1431. She was quite undaunted at the sight of the stake and scaffold, which she mounted as boldly as she had formerly done the breach at an assault.

Thus perished this extraordinary girl, in the nineteenth year of her age. Her execution was as disgraceful to the English, as the cold neglect with which she was treated in her misfortunes was to France.

Style.

"To write well is at once to think well, to feel rightly, and to render properly: it is to have, at the same time, mind, soul, taste: style supposes the reunion and the exercise of all the intellectual faculties. The style is the man." Such are the last words of Buffon's Maxims. Southey speaks of the same subject in the following passage, from one of his familiar letters:—"A man with a clear head, a good heart, and an honest understanding, will always write well: it is owing either to a muddy head, an evil heart, or a sophisticated intellect that men write badly, and sin either against reason, or goodness, or sincerity. There may be secrets in painting, but there none in style. When I have been asked the foolish question, what a young man should do who wishes to acquire a good style? my answer has been, that he should never think about it, but say what he has to say as perspicuously as he can, and as briefly as he can, and then the style will take care of itself."

Bed Bugs.

There is a long article in the Valley Farmer, by which it is established beyond question, that sweet oil occasionally rubbed over bedsteads, chairboards, &c., will effectually prevent the appearance of bed-bugs. We deem unnecessary to publish the evidence of the efficiency of this cheap and agreeably preventative of the nuisance in question. The reader will take our word that it is conclusive.

Nut for Grammarians

The Boston Transcript publishes "a conversation between a young Lady who writes for the magazines and an old gentleman who can speak English:"

Old Gentleman.—"Are there any houses building in your village?"

Young Lady.—"No, sir. There is a new house being built for Mr. Smith, but it is the carpenters who are building."

Old Gentleman.—"True; I sit corrected. To be building is certainly a different thing from to be being built; and how long has Mr. Smith's house been being built?"

Young Lady.—(Looks puzzled for a moment, and then answers rather abruptly.) "Nearly a year."

Old Gentleman.—"How much longer do you think it will be being built?"

Young Lady.—(Explosively.) "I don't know."

Old Gentleman.—"I should think Mr. Smith would be annoyed by its being so long being built, for the house he now occupies being old, he must leave it, and the new one being only being built, instead of being built as he expected, he cannot"—

The young lady leaves the room very suddenly.

Origin of Society and Government.

Man in this state (of nature,) alone and abandoned to himself, could do nothing for his preservation. It was necessary, therefore, that he should unite himself and associate with his like, in order to bring together their strength and intelligence in common stock.

What a man alone would not have been able to effect, men have executed in concert, and all together they preserve their work. Such is the origin, such the avantage, and the end of all society. Government owes its birth to the necessity of preventing and repulsing the injuries which the associated individuals had to fear from one another. It is the sentinel who watches in order that the common labors be not disturbed. Thus society originates in the wants of men; government in their vices. Society tends always to good, government ought always to tend to the repressing of evil. Society is the first, it is in its origin independent and free; government was instituted for it, and is but its instrument. It is for one to command, it is for the other to obey.—[Raynal.

Never repeat a story unless you know it to be correct—and even not then, unless something is to be gained, either of interest to yourself, or for the good of persons concerned. Tattling is a mean practice, and he who engages in it, becomes more fond of it in proportion as he is successful. If you have no good to say of your neighbor, never reproach his character by telling that which is false. He who tells you of the faults of others, intends to tell others of your faults, and so the dish of news is handed from one to another until the tale becomes erroneous. A story never losses anything, is wisely remarked, but on the contrary gains in proportion as it is repeated by those who have not a very strict regard for the truth. Truly, the tongue is an unruly member, full of evil.

Discovery of a New Planet.

Mr. J. B. Lind, the Astronomer at Bishop's Observatory, Regent's Park, London, has discovered another new Planet. The discovery was made May 19th, in the constellation Scorpio, about eight north of the celiptic, and forming at the time an equilateral triangle with the stars (xi) Scorpii and (psi) Libræ. It is of a pale bluish color, and its light is about equal to that of a star of the ninth magnitude.

The famous city of Petra, in Arabia, has been the theme of admiration and astonishment to all the tourists of recent times; but another town, apparently far more ancient, and of greater extent still, exists in the north of Affganistan, and is known throughout the East by tha name of Bameean. The city consists of a great number of apartments cut out of solid rock. It is said that in many of them the walls are adorned with paintings, which look still fresh, after centuries of desertion and solitude; some of them are adorned with riches and carved works. There are supposed to be more than twelve thousand of such habitations in Bameean; the country of the Affghans abounds with them; but the natives, who are mostly mahometans, entertain a superstitious prejudice against inhabiting such homes. They have old traditions which declare them to have been the first habitations of mankind; and that strange city is usually mentioned by some of the classic authors; yet, by whom its rocky abodes were excavated, who were its inhabitants, and what their history, all has passed from the recollection of the world, and exists only in fabulous or uncertain tales.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—It was six years on Monday last, since Sir John Franklin sailed from Sheerness on his dangerous expedition, and the chances of his safety at the present are but slight indeed. Still his hopeful wife, hoping against hope, enlists the sympathies of brave hearts; and many are found ready and willing to engage in the task, difficult though it be, of resolving the mystery of her husband's fate. Even now another vessel has set out on the mission of mercy, and may success attend the efforts of those who are braving so many dangers in the cause of humanity.

In a letter written by Sir John to Col. Sabine Drake, dated Fish Islands, 9th July, 1845, after noticing that the Erebus and Terror, two of his expedition, had received from the Transports which accompanied them to that point, provisions, clothing, fuel and stores for three years, namely, to July, 1848, thus proceeds:

"I hope my dear wife and daughter will not be over anxious if we should not return by the the time they have fixed upon; and and I must beg of you to give them the benefit of your advice and experience when that arrives, for you know well, that even after the second winter, without success in our object, we should wish to try some other channel, if the state of our provisions and the health of the crew justify it."—[N. Y. Mirror.

The Great Exhibition.

Like the closing rush at "The Derby," all the world appears to have made one great final effort to enjoy the last exclusive day at the Crystal Palace, before the enormous influx of visitors which the present week is expected to bring shuts them out from all chance of viewing the contents of the building with convenience and comfort. The doors are not opened on Saturdays till twelve o.clock, to enable the week's cleaning and re-decoration to be fully completed, but an hour before that time there was a dense mass of visitors collected around the east, west, and southern entrances, and at twelve o'clock the number must have been little short of 10,000; the line of carriages extending from the centre of the building down to Albert-gate. From twelve till four o'clock the influx of people never ceased for a moment, and some idea of the vast numbers assembled may be formed from the fact that 5078*l.*, was taken at the doors. There were thus during the day 20,312 persons who paid the 5*s.* entrance fee, and the number of season-ticket holders could not have been less than 10,000 to 15,000, making altogether from 30,000 to 35,000 visitors. The amount received up to the the present time will, we have no boubt, discharge fully all the liabilities of the royal commissioners, leaving the Crystal Palace the property of the public. What is to be done with the couple of hundred thousand pounds which there is every probability will be realized, under the present arrangement, before the final closing of the Exhibition we do not pretend to conjecture. The Morning Herald suggests that after a certain period—say the 1st of August, the building should be gratuitously opened to the public four days in each week.

Lord Leigh has invited all his numerous tenants to visit London at his expense, that they may see the Crystal Palace and its contents.

Pine and Cedar in California.

Of all the wonders I have ever seen in the vegetable kingdom, remarks an observant traveller, nothing will bear comparison with the magnificent and lofty growth of cedars and pines which embellish the hills and mountains that lead to, and make up the great Sierra Nevada Range. The magnificence and grandeur of scenes in which these trees abound, cannot be imagined by any man who has not seen them, and felt the awe and sublimity to which they gave rise. I have counted in a circle of fifty feet in diameter, thirteen pine trees, not one of which was less than three feet in diameter, or less than two hundred and fifty feet in height, nor was any of them marked by the slightest curve or inclination. They are the inimitable and lofty monuments of nature, uninfluenced by sweeping storms and winds, unbent and undecayed by a centurion age. Not a limb or a knot can be found upon their bodies until you reach an altitude of from one hundred to two hundred feet, beyond which height they continue to grow until their towering majesty overawes all surrounding objects, and afford a fit refuge for the noble bird which adorns the banner of our country. No man can travel through these scenes without feeling that the grandeur of Omnipotence itself is teaching him his finite and insignificant powers. Such was the moral influence of those leviathan growths of cedars and pines upon my mind, I would not have dared to have given entertainment to a fugitive thought against the supremacy, wisdom, and power of Jehovah. Such are the pine and cedar forests of California, which cover an area of hundreds, if not thousands of square miles.

"We consider the locomotive," says the Scientific American, "the prince of prime motors, and we have no hopes of ever seeing it superceeded by an electrio-magnetic engine. We may be mistaken, but when 400 tons can be drawn 53 miles at the expense of only one-and-a-half cts. per ton for coal, as has been done by a locomotive, we may begin to talk of the importance of Electro Magnetism as a prime mover."

A TWO-HEADED LIVING MORTAL.—The Panama Herald says that "about a hundred miles from this, within the province, there exists a native child, which was born with two distinct heads. The child is a male, and is now about ten years old. It has been seen by persons residing in this city, and their statement in relation to the extraordinary malformation is authentic. A well known medical gentleman and physologist will visit the child for the purpose of making a scientific examination."

Worse.

A modern dandy with "har" all over his face trying to smile. A monkey was thrown into fits the other day on Fourth street, in witnessing the above operation.

Admirable Example.

George Washington, when young, was about to go to sea as midshipman: everything was arranged, the vessel lay opposite his father's house, the little boat had come on shore to take him off, and his whole heart was bent on going. After his trunk had been carried down to the boat, he went to bid his mother farewell, and saw the tears bursting from her eyes. However he said nothing to her; but he saw that his mother would be distressed if he went, and perhaps never be happy again. He just turned round to the servant, and said, 'Go and tell them to fetch my trunk back. I will not go away to break my mother's heart.' His mother was struck with his decision, and she said to him, 'George' God has promised to bless the children that honor their parents, and I believe He will bless you."

Milk is capable of undergoing the vinous fermentation, and consequently, of affording a spirituous liquor. Marco Polo who wrote in the thirteenth century, asserted that liquor prepared from Mare's milk, as prepared by the Tartars, might be taken for white wine.

Communications.

KANESVILLE, August 6th, 1851.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GUARDIAN:

DEAR BROTHER:—Thinking perhaps that many of the Saints, as well as those who do not profess to be Saints, have forgotten the sayings of the MOST HIGH GOD, to his Church, to wit; that there is no kingdom without a law, and no law without conditions of glories, or penalties—this is the case and has been in all ages past.

The first law was given to man, by him who is immutable, on the morn of his creation, or at the time he was placed in the beautiful Garden of Eden, where all was vernal bloom, or autumnal fruit, to please the eye, to gladden the heart, to satiate the taste, or to invigorate the soul of man. God gave to man a law, saying, "And of every tree of the Garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, of it thou shalt not eat, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Mark it: The law—thou shalt not eat of that certain tree. The penalty—thou shalt die. Now without a penalty there would be no glory, and without a law there would be no power; nothing to lead the mind, nothing to govern or control the actions:—But that there might be a balance, a controling power, God gave the law. Simple, easy, still a power therein! A controling destiny envolved within that sphere. Man disobeyed, the law was put in force: He died. That being—formed in the express image of his Creator; and that might have bloomed in Primeal Beauty to all Eternity, was now cast out of that immortal abode, amid the fruit and flowers of Eden; a Garden planted and dressed by God's own hand, and nourished by the genial rays of his benign countenance, upon a cold and barren waste, a land void of fruit, and where none of those beautiful flowers of Paradise were want to grow, and doomed to labor, to procure his bread, through toil and sweat, amid the thorns and thistles of this earth; where toil is wont to overcome the vigor and strength, and sickness and disease engender death—where all is anxiety and trouble, and where the most fond hopes, and lively anticipations of future greatness in this life ends in death. Here let me ask, my beloved reader, have you once thought of these things, have you reflected that all sins and misery, our perplexing anxieties, all originate in disobedience and end in death? If not, then follow me a little farther.

We find Noah a preacher of righteousness, a self-possessing man having the courage and power to believe and obey God. This same God that spoke to Adam at the first, had now spoken to Noah: A second law had been given; and men having multiplied became numerous upon the face of the earth, and had corrupted their ways, even worse than did their Father Adam, and the penalty of that law was again death. By one general swope of destruction mankind were doomed to death.

Again we find that same Omnicient God speaking with Moses, declaring to the house of Israel his law—(judgement and statutes, saith the Prophet, "which if a man do he shall live in them.") But inasmuch as the House of Israel, did not adhere to that law, nor do the things that were contained therein; the law was executed, and the penalty; that they should "be broken from being a nation, and their seed scattered among all nations, and that they should become a hiss and a by-word among all people," has been fulfilled. Is the penalty manifest? It is. "But in the last days," saith an ancient writer, "another mighty angel shall fly through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth." (Now the Gospel is this, the law that God gives, that requires implicit obedience from all men—God's spell, or God's power to men, whereby, if you yield obedience thereto, we shall be regenerated, or generated by, or of the spirit and law of God, which produces immortality in the presence of God.) This Gospel to be proclaimed by the mighty angel, shall be, "fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgement is come; and worship him that made the heavens and the earth, and the seas and the fountains of water." Now this law, or this spell of God's testimony shall be, "to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgement is come, and worship him, for he made the heavens, and the earth, the seas, and the fountains of water."

And now hear ye! hear ye! All men that dwell upon the face of the earth—behold the angel has proclaimed this Gospel, and committed the power thereof unto the servants of the Most High. And now the cry is, unto all; Repent ye! Repent ye! and fear God—acknowledge his supremacy—give glory to him—know that light and truth is of him—(glory is light, truth, knowledge, and power,) for the hour of his judgement is come. The great period has arrived when he will be known among the nations. The elders are sent forth, not to be taught by the powers of priestcraft or sectarianism, but to teach the power of God, and the principle of union,—not to listen to the dogmatism of man, but to testify of the power, and the light, and the glory of God; and to declare his judgements that shall come.

Saith the Prophet, "the secrets of the Lord are with the righteous, and his judgements with those that fear him."

And saith the Almighty, he who is eternal, "after your testimony cometh the testimony of thunderings, and of lightnings, of earthquakes, and of tempests. The sea and the waves roaring, and heaving themselves beyond their bounds—Of scourges, of sickness and disease among the inhabitants of the earth—Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking for those things that shall come on the ungodly. Is it so? Since the establishment of the Church of Christ in A. D., 1830, and the testimony of the elders, of the Church of Christ, sent among the nations; have not those signs, and judgments, been making manifest, that this is the day of God's power, and of his testimony; Verily they have.

The hour of his judgment has come—every nation trembles—every princely crown totters—all nations fear, and what do they fear—they know not—their moral and social atmosphere is beclouded, and the glory of their horizon, having risen to its zenith, is shrouded in blackness; and having denied inspiration, the magnet, it has ceased to work, and their chart though correct is of no avail; and e'er long this mighty ship that carries so many voyagers over these tempestuous seas of human greatness, will flounder amid the reef of political and ecclesiastical dishonesty. Therefore repent ye! repent ye! all ye ends of the earth, and fear God, and give glory to him who created the heavens and the earth; and be ye baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for a remission of your sins, that ye may receive the Holy Ghost, which shall lead you into all truth. More Anon,

EVERMONT.

Advice to Mothers.

BY AN OLD SCHOOL MASTER.

To teach the young ideas how to shoot, is an arduous task. Solomon says, "train up a child in the way he should go." 'Tis certain that early impressions are lasting; of what great moment therefore, is early instruction to infants. With language the first communications are made. Correctly pronounced words should always be used; instead of what I call baby talk, (which I so frequently have with aversion, heard parents use to their infants,) always speak or talk, to your infants or children, as you would on the same subject, talk or speak to adults. Teach them true principles, and the love of truth, both by precept and example. Never insist on them doing what they cannot do, nor let them neglect that which they can and should perform. Do not threaten, but correct them with proper correction, and be yourself in a proper temperature while doing it. Teach them to obey you, as a duty, and not for reward. As soon as they can speak plain, (which will generally be very early, if you will speak plain and correct to them,) teach them the Alphabet. A child may learn the Alphabet, under three years of age, and be a good, (or tolerable good) reader at four, a good writer and Geographer at six, a good Grammarian and Arithmetician at ten, a mathematician at twelve years of age. Under this consideration, which has comparatively few exceptions; we plainly discover how much time is lost by mothers holding the opinion, and using the expresion, "He is too young yet." The road to science, is one of the best ways for the human family to travel, and in early infancy, is the time to commence the journey.

I wish my remarks, particularly applied to mothers in the Church of L. D. Saints; remember whom your offspring are expected to represent in future; their fathers, their mothers, and their progenitors. Ignorance can never perform the representation. Ignorance can never be exalted, consequently can never exalt. Saviors will stand upon Mount Zion, what will be their qualifications? I answer,—knowledge—and not ignorance,—nobility—not ignobility. On whom does the duty devolve? I answer, on mothers. On whom did the fall of man devolve? on the woman. On whom will the rise of man devolve? on woman, yes on mothers. Why? because the first ideas in the human mind are communicated by the mother. I will here relate an applicable anecdote by way of caution.

An old intoxicated school teacher, passing through the village of his school, cried out, "I am master of this village." How so? said an offended bystander, because said he, "I am master of the children; the children are masters of the mothers, the mothers are masters of the fathers; consequently said he, I am master of the whole village." Now I advise you, let not your children thus predominate, but I repeat, train up your children in the way they should go, and the result will be nothing to hurt or destroy in all God's Holy Mountain; for the child will know how to lead ferocious animals, and play on the hole of the Cocatrice den, and mothers will have the honor of being faithful mothers in Israel, their offspring will honor them, as their first and greatest preceptors; their husbands will bestow double honor and exaltation upon them, and the possession and inheritance of the Kingdom of God, will be the result.

THE SOUTHERN CONGRESS.—The Charleston Courier of the 19th inst., contains the proclamation of Gov. Means, of South Carolina, (who signs himself "Governor and Commander-in-Chief") to the managers of elections throughout the State, to hold an election on the 2d Monday in October next, and the day following, for two Deputies from each Congressional District of the State, who are to represent the State in a Southern Congress. This is done according to the act of the last legislature The Southern Congress, however, from present prospects, will be a meagre affair. The disposition to join South Corolina in such a convocation, is neither general nor cordial as far as may be judged by public indications.—[Balt. Sun.

The Mormons in Utah.

A remarkable fact is this of Mormonism, from whatever point of view it is considered. A sect whose doctrines are pronounced absurd and immoral by those who have explored them with care, and it may be presumed with impartial intelligence; whose community is refused an abode among the Christian citizens of Illinois, and compelled to flee to the wilderness, not only founds there a flourishing State, but makes converts in all parts of Christendom. And these converts are by no means from the offscourings of society, but are substantial, sober, industrious people, not highly educated, but generally, as far as we can judge from those we have known, well endowed with common sense and practical judgment of affairs. Indeed the success of the Salt Lake Colony would seem to prove that the great body of the Mormons are persons of energy and capacity. What is it that brings such men to the Mormon Church? Is it that spirit of religious fanaticism which is said to prompt adherence to the greatest absurdities, provided they arrogate to themselves a supernatural character? Or is it some depraved and perverted instinct of the heart seeking justification for immorality under the sanctions of religion? Or is it something more and different from these? We confess that it is not clear to our comprehension. There is a mystery in the matter we do not pretend to solve.

Meanwhile the Colony in Utah is constantly receiving accessions of men who, apart from their peculiar religious and moral notions, would be a gain to any community. A great number of English artisans have already reached this country, or are now leaving their native home, on their way to join the Colony. On the continent of Europe the ardent labors of the Mormon missionaries—and we know of no missionaries more enthusiastic and devoted to their work—seem to be hardly less successful. They have made proselytes wherever they have gone, and they appear to have gone everywhere. In Denmark and Sweden we hear of them, and of an increase in the number of "Saints" consequent upon their labors. Yesterday their came into our hands the first number of the Etoile du Deseret, an occasional publication issued at Paris in defence of their doctrines Its Editor says it "will have the advantage of giving instruction and some consolations to the brethren of Italy, of Switzerland, and the Channel Islands, who understand the French language, as well as to the brethren of France."

All these proselytes to Mormonism turn their faces toward the Great Valley as to the chosen abode of their faith. There reside its chiefs, and its sacred writings are preserved, and there they can practice its observances without let or hindrance. For the present the spread of Mormonism in Europe tends only to build up that Colony, and such it would appear must continue to be the case. Nowhere in the Old World would such a sect be allowed to establish itself; even in the New it had to seek in the Desert a place for its habitations.

The people of the United States can, in a commercial and political sense, only be benefitted by the growth of this remarkable people. They occupy a region which, but for them, would long have remained unoccupied and unimproved. Lying half way, as it were, between the Atlantic and Pacific, its settlement at this early period is of the highest consequence in shaping the destinies of the Continent, and holding the East and West firmly united. Through their means the opening of rapid communication between the States on each side will be greatly accelerated. And while they are forced by the exigencies of their position, and their own honorable instinct of independence, to provide for their own wants by establishing among themselves the various branches of mechanical and manufacturing industry, their commerce will be of greater and greater value to the seaboard States. One might almost exclaim that here is a great Providenual end of their existence. And whatever may have been the difficulties attending their residence at Nauvoo, they have since then proved themselves patriotic citizens of the Republic and we see not how in their present position, they are in danger of ever being assailed by hostile or intolerant neighbors. It is certainly a striking illustration of the genius of our Government, and of the liberal spirit of the age, that a Mormon Delegate will take his seat in the next Congress, and that in due time we shall see Mormon members in both Houses. Two or three centuries ago such heretics would have been burned or hanged for the culpability of their belief. It is certainly a more profitable as well as humane way to leave religious errors wherever they exist, to time and the progress of intelligence, and to open to the citizen every avenue of honor and usefulness without regard to the nature of his convictions on supernatural subjects.

A DESPERATE RESOLVE.—You can't ruin yourselves by advertising—The Lockport Daily Courier says: "There is a legend that a merchant once determingd to ruin himself by squandering his money in advertising; but he found that the more he advertised the richer he grew, until at last he was obliged to give up in despair of ever effecting his purpose in that way."

Horace Greely gives a description in his paper of a newly invented brick he has seen in London. It is so moulded as to be hollow in the centre, whereby the transmission of moisture through a wall composed of this brick is prevented, and the dampness often complained of in brick houses precluded. The brick is larger than those usually made, and one side is wedge-shaped.

Development of the Lungs.

"Much has been said and written upon diet, eating, and drinking, but I do not recollect noticing a remark in any writer upon the manner of breathing. Multitudes, especially ladies in easy circumstances, contract a vicious and destructive mode of breathing. They suppress their breathing, and contract the habit of short, quick breathing, not carrying the breath half way down the chest, and scarcely expanding the lower portions of the chest at all. Lacing the bottom of the chest also greatly increases this evil, and confirms a bad habit of breathing. Children that move about a great deal in the open air, and in no way laced, breath deep and full to the bottom of the chest, and every part of it. So also with most out-door laborers, and persons who take a great deal of exercise in the open air, because the lungs give us the power of action, and the more exercise we take, especially out of doors, the larger the lungs become, and the less liable to disease. In all occupations that require standing, keep the person straight. If at a table, let it be high, raised up nearly to the arm-pits, so as not to require you to stoop; you will find the employment much easier—not one half so fatiguing; whilst the form of the chest and symmetry of the figure will remain perfect. You have noticed that a vast many tall ladies stoop, while a great many short ones are straight. This arises, I think, from the table at which they sit, or work, or occupy themselves, or study, being of a medium height; far too low for a tall person, and about right for a short one. This should be carefully corrected and regarded, so that each lady may occupy herself at a table to suit her, and thus prevent the possibility or necessity of stooping."—[Dr. Fitch.

Moral Beauty.

All beauty is a reflection of the Deity, whether it be physical, intellectual, or moral. The beautifully blended colors of the rainbow, the countless hues which variagte and beautify the floral creation, and the feathered tribe; the "blue etherial sky," with its housands of ministers of light and glory; and the "human face divine," with all its endearing smiles and fascinating glances—are the works of His hands who is the source of all beauty. The poet says:—

A thing of beauty is a joy for ever:

and we admire the sentiment. It is peculiarly refreshing to look upon the varied aspects of beauty as they appear in the wondrous works of nature. They are commentaries upon the wisdom, power and goodness of their Creator. The multiform features of mental beauty to possess an especial charm for those who can appreciate them. Wit, humor, genius, imagination, memory, and understanding may be called the lights and shades of the picture of the human mind. It is very pleasant to think of some of natures noblemen, who have left splendid monuments behind them upon which they inscribed this beauty. Shakespeare, Milton, Bacon, Locke, and Newton rank amongst its greatest representatives; and their fame is world-wide, and undying.

But there is a kind of beauty which is even more attractive than this; and it is the glory of humanity. The moral nature of man, when it is refined by education, and sanctified by religion, is the richest and most beautiful treasure in the world. And yet how few there are who understand and value its importance. Whatever may be the amount of pleasure we derive from viewing the beauties of nature and art, and enriching our minds with the precious truths of literature and science. It is nothing when compared with this. Here we find the germs of human happiness—the source of peace, virtue, and love. It is this that inspires the patriot, and philanthropist and, the Christian Men may be endowed with personal beauty and mental greatness, but they are mean and despicable if they are destitute of moral principle. The former receive their polish and lustre from the latter: but without it they are often the instruments of vice and wickedness to their possessor. It would be infinitely better for our country, if the educator of the people paid more attention to the heart and less to the person and the head. We do not wish either to be neglected: but we affirm that special care should be taken in training, developing, and directing the moral feelings. They form the chief element in the persons character, and exercise the most potent influence on society. When a man's feelings, affections, motives, and sympathies are pure, and are centered on proper and legitimate objects, he possesses a heaven within himself. His very countenance is illuminated with love and benignity, and it becomes to all who know him an index and title-page to the contents of his heart. There is something truly lovely in a good man, who is actuated by good principles, and is always endeavoring to elevate his fellow men in tha scale of being. He is an embodiment of moral beauty. Society, with all its boasted means and advantages, stands in need of more of his moral excellence, It will perfect and establish all that is good and valuable, and destroy and extirpate every thing that is unholy and unjust. It is calculated to create a reciprocity of feeling and attachment between prince and peasant, the master and servant, and all classes of society. In it we have an antidote for all the glaring and crying evils of our land. That beauty, which we desire to see adorning the masses of the people, is a daughter of the skies, and was designed by God to be the basis of human society.

Pacific Railroad.

We clip the following from the St. Louis Intelligencer of the 19th ult., which shows the deep interest felt, and the energetic measures entered into, by the citizens of that place; to carry out their part, of this laudable and enterprizing undertaking:

OFFICE OF PACIFIC RAILROAD,
June 18th, 1851.

The Board of Directors of the Pacific Railroad, at their meeting held this day, proceeded to locate the first division of the road. The various surveyed routes and estimated costs of the same having been presented and explained by Mr. James P. Kirkwood, Chief Engineer. Mr. Lucas offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the route through Chouteau Pond Valley and the Valley of the Des Peres, to the Merrimac Valley, and up that Valley for a distance of about thirty-nine miles from St. Louis, commencing in St. Louis at Fourteenth Street, be adopted as the first division of the Pacific Railroad.

The yeas and nays were demanded on this resolution, and the result was as follows: Yeas—Messrs. Allen, Bridge, Haren, Harrison, Kennett, Labeaume, Lucas, Walsh and Yeatman—9—Nays—none. The entire Board present and voting

On motion of Mr. Lucas, the resolution adopting the route of the first division of the Pacific Railroad, and the vote thereon, were directed to be published in the daily papers of St. Louis.

On motion of Mr. Kennett, the following resolution in relation to calls on stock in the Pacific Railroad, was adopted.

Resolved, That not exceeding thirty per cent upon the capital stock of the Company shall be called in any one year during the construction of the road.

The foregoing are correct extracts from the minutes of the Board Directors of the Pacific Railroad, and are furnished by their authority for publication.

A. S. MITCHELL,
Secretary Pacific Railroad.

Pacific Rail Road Located.

It will be seen from the proceedings of the Board of Directors published this morning, that at their meeting yesterday, they located thirty-nine miles of the road, running westwardly from this City. The road is to begin at Fourteenth Street, in the Valley of Chouteau's Pond, and will run thence westwardly through the Valley, until it reaches the vicinity of the Rock Spring, about three miles from the Court House. It will then wind to the South, around the high ground on the left until it strikes the old Manchester road, about 300 yards beyond where the new Manchester road diverges from the old one. It will cross the old road at this point; and will run for some distance south of the new road; it will then cross the new road and run for some distance on the north of it. A short distance east of Sutton's, (which is about 6 miles from the City), it will again cross the new road to the south, and will run thence in a south west direction to Dougherty's Ferry on the Merrimac, about 20 miles from the City, and two or three miles south of Manchester.

It will run thence up the Valley of the Merrimac, on the north side of the river for a considerable distance. Beyond that, we are not sufficiently acquainted with the localities to give the precise route.

We learn that ground will be broken on the 4th of July, in the commencement of the work—a fit day to commemorate an event, so important to Missouri.

MORE TERRITORY.—Some of the Californians seem quite restless. While one party are anxious to make a decent on Lower California and turn Mazatlan into the capital of a new State, others propose to wrest the rich state of Sonora, lying on the gulf of California between 27d. and 33d. north latitude, so as to Americanise them both. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo will put a bar, it is thought, to all hope of being annexed to this Union.

Female Influence.

Under God, I owe my education; nay, all that I have, been, or am, to the council and tutelage of a pious mother. It was peace to her sainted spirit, her monitory voice that first taught my young heart to feel there was danger in the intoxicating cup, and that safety lay in abstinance.

As no one is indebted more than myself to the kind influence in question, so no one more fully realizes how decisively it bears upon the destinies of others. Full well I know, that by woman came the apostacy of Adam, and by woman the recovery through Jesus. It was woman that embued the mind and formed the character of Moses, Israel's deliverer. It was woman that led the choir, and gave back the response of that triumphal prosession which went forth to celebrate the timbrels on the banks of the Red Sea, the overthrow of Pharaoh. It was woman who put Cisero to flight, and composed the song of Deborah and Barak, the son of Apinoan, and judge in righteousness, for years the tribes of Israel. It was woman that defeated the wicked counsels of Haman, delivered righteous Mordicai, and saved a whole people from their utter dissolution.

And not to speak of Semiramis at Babylon, of Catherine of Russia, or of those Queens of England whose joyous reigns constitute the brightest period of British history, or of her, the young and loyal, the patron of learning and morals who now adorns the throne the sea-girt-isles; not now to speak of those, there are others of more sacred character, of whom it were admissible even now to speak.

The scepter of empire is not the scepter that best befits the hand of a woman; nor is the field of carnage her field of glory.

Home, sweet home, is her theatre of action, pedestal of beauty; and throne of power. Or, if seen abroad, she is seen to the best advantage when on errands of love, and wearing her robes of mercy.

It was not woman who slept during the agonies of Gethsemany; it was not woman who denied her lord at the palace of Caiaphas; it was not woman who deserted his cross on the hill of Calvary—But it was woman that dared to testify to his corpse, that procured spices for embalming it, and that was found last at night and first in the morning at his sepulchre. Thus has neither impaired her kindness, nor changed her character.

Now, as formerly, she is first to enter, and most reluctant to leave, the abode of misery. Now, as formerly, it is her office, and well it has been sustained, to stay the fainting head, wipe from the dim eye the tear of anguish, and from the cold forehead the dew of death.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 8, 1851.

The Mormons in Utah.

We clip from the New York Tribune of a late date, an article headed as above, which our readers will find on our first page. The article is ably written, and partakes of a liberal and generous spirit; such a spirit, though it shaves rather close in some points, and if anything, rather discountenances Mormonism; in the main, breathes kind and impartial sentiments.

We admire, to a certain extent the candor manifested in the article; and though the Editor cannot comprehend, nor solve the mystery connected with well endowed people embracing the faith of the Saints; we give his remarks the credit due their merit. "These converts are by no means from the off-scourings of society, but are substantial, sober, industrious people, &c." These are the remarks of the Editor of the Tribune, which are verily true; and in addition to these he asks the following candid questions, which we purpose to answer in a similar manner before finishing this article.

"What is it that brings such men into the Mormon Church? Is it that spirit of religious fanaticism, which is said to prompt adherence to the greatest absurdities, provided they arrogate to themselves a supernatural character? Or is it some depraved and perverted instinct of the heart seeking justification for immorality under the sanction of religion? Or is it something more and different from these? We confess that it is not clear to our comprehension. There is a mystery in the matter we do not pretend to solve."

We are not at all surprized, that the Editor should not be able to comprehend, or solve the mystery connected with Mormonism, seeing, that he has not embraced the Gospel of Christ.

"Except a man be born again, he cannot SEE the Kingdom of God."

"The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

From the foregoing paragraphs the reader may learn the reason, why the Editor of the Tribune cannot solve the mystery; and why Mormonism is not clear to his comprehension. It is evident, if the words of the Lord are true, that he could not see—in other words comprehend the things of the Kingdom, without first being born of water, and of the spirit. Being a liberal minded man, according to the common acceptation of the term in this day, he no doubt discards anything like religion; because he believes it to be Sectarianism.

The difference then, between the Editor and the Mormons, arises solely from the fact, that he is a natural man; and being so, he receives not the things of the spirit of God, because they are foolishness to him; and does not comprehend them; because they can only be discerned by the spirit of their author. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so, the things of God knoweth no man, but by the spirit of God."

In ancient days, because the Jews could not solve the mystery connected with the Messiah's Government, and mission on earth; they ascribed to his character, all that human ingenuity could invent in the shape of mis-representations to excite popular indignation, and fury against him; until at last through a court of lying witnesses, they condemned him to be crucified on the accursed tree, with the inscription over his head; King of the Jews. While he lived, because they could not comprehend, nor fathom his motives, and their object; he was branded with being a disturber of the public peace—an insurrectionist—a traitor to the Government—one possessed of a Devil, &c., &c. His hallowed, and heaven-born motives were looked upon by that generation with distrust; and as emanating from a desire to overthrow their Government, and destroy the sacred institutions of their fathers. What does the scripture say concerning that people? Paul says; had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory.

Ignorance, was the baneful barrier existing between them, and their promised redeemer. As with the Nazerene and his disciple; so with us. The Latter-day Saints' course has been, and perhaps now is, looked upon with a jealous eye, and distrustful heart; and it has been said by some that traitorism to the Government of our fathers, is that which prompts our every move. But to the contrary, have we not clearly and satisfactorily evinced, our loyalty and patriotism to the Government, at a time, and under circumstances the most appalling to the human heart? We answer, Yes! when feeble nature would have said; recline from the task.

Now, for the Editor's interrogations. What is it that brings such men into the Mormon Church? Various motives prompt men to embrace our faith, some from pure—others from impure motives. The former comes into our Church, because they love truth and righteousness; the latter to gratify other desires, seperate and apart from those already mentioned; and from this class arises all the filth and stench, that sometimes float on the public current, &c.

If, there is any depravity, or perverted instinct in embracing truth and righteousness; we possess it. If there is any immorality in keeping the commandments of God, and sustaining the laws of our country! We profess to be the class of people who do it! If the Editorof the Tribune chooses to esteem the effects produced by the spirit of Christ, religious fanaticism, and a prompt adherence to truth, the greatest absurdity of the age! We are the people who follow their dictates; other people's views to the contrary, notwithstanding.

In conclusion, if there are any class of people on earth who desire peace, and the perpetuity of the union of these States more than we do; we should like to know them.

News from the Plains, Salt Lake, and Sacramento City.

Two gentlemen from Sacramento City, arrived in this town on the 26th ult. Mr. D. T. Nichols, is a resident of Illinois, and passed through this place last season, on his way to the mines; he has all the appearance of a gentleman, and a good citizen, and says that he did very well, during his brief stay in the great El Dorado of the West. His companion Mr. Robb, is a citizen of Davis County, in this States. A few of their company left Sacramento on the 4th of May, the balance left on the 14th, by way of Salt Lake; and all met at the latter place about the 6th of June, and left on the 10th. They represent matters and things in the Valley to be in a very prosperous condition; the crops looked remarkably well, and as a general thing the citizens of that place enjoyed very good health; but money was rather scarce.

We glean from the Sacramento Transcript of May 1st, handed to us by these gentlemen; that Dry Goods, and Groceries are at a very low ebb in that section of country. Pilot Bread is sold at eight cents per pound; Coffee from fifteen to seventeen; Mould Candles ten cents; Raisins three dollars per box; Sheeting from eight to eleven cents per yard; and other articles in proportion.

This paper as usual, chronicles the full sweep that Judge Lynch has in that Country; lynching is the order of the day there, and rioting, theft, &c., the order of the night.

Mr. Livingston, of the firm of Kinkade & Livingston, merchants, Salt Lake, arrived at Great Salt Lake City, between the 6th and 10th of June, well. Mr. Nichols states, that they met a company of Michigan emigrants near the base of the first mountain, this side of Salt Lake, getting along very well,—no sickness among them. A second company they met sixty miles this side of the Valley; they also represented themselves from Michigan. Holliday's mule train was met by them at Greene River; the animals looked very well, and seemed to be improving. Kinkade & Livingston's, they met about the second crossing of the Sweet Water, their cattle were very much jaded down, and fatigued; this train had to get fourteen yoke of cattle from Fort Laramie; and besides, they expected an additional recruit from Weber River; after all, they only traveled from six to ten miles a day.

Hon. A. W. Babbitt's company were met twenty miles above Fort Laramie, on the North side of the Platte; Babbitt himself, and the officers of Utah crossed at the Fort, to the South side; Mr. B. had one of his wagons broke down, and he was under the necessity of leaving four horses at the Fort.

Captain Smith, with a company of Saints comprising of one hundred and fifty wagons, they met fifty miles above Fort Kearney; this company crossed the Loupe Fork on Saturday the 12th June,—made but very little headway till then, in consequence of the bad roads, and their endeavoring to head some of the larger streams, which proved ineffectual. Mr. Smith's company were then, six weeks out from Kanesville.

President Orson Hyde, and his express company, were seen at a distance, on the same day that our informants met Capt. Smith and company, fifty miles above Fort Kearney, progressing on their journey with alacrity and speed. Monroe's train of Merchandise for the Valley, was only fifty miles this side of Fort Kearney, and breaking down every day. They broke twenty axletrees, on the way from Bethlehem, on the Missouri River; a distance only of one hundred and fifty miles. Mr. Monroe had gone ahead of his train, to procure if possible other wagons at the Fort. Here is another specimen of the wagons made, or rather Man-u-factured in St. Louis. Whoever had the contract of making these wagons, ought to have his name, and place of residence published to the world; so that a mark might be put on the CAIN, to distinguish him from the rest of mankind.

What can be more provoking, than to be imposed upon? and the imposition made manifest, at a time and place; when and where, no redress can be had? We leave the injured parties to answer. It is rascality in the extreme, the manner in which the emigrants have suffered this season, through the vile transactions of men, who claim to have a little honor left; but whose works too clearly evince, hollow-heartedness, dishonesty, and fraud in their most obdurate form.

Emigrants, hereafter should beware, where they purchase their wagons; our mechanics here, say, that they can furnish any number of wagons, if timely notice is given, and half the amount advanced, so that they can procure stock, and other articles necessary for the undertaking. They are known to be responsible men; and their capabilities stand undoubted.

Messrs. Nichols & Robb, say: that the roads, and grass are remarkably good this season on the plains, and that the streams, especially the Platte are unusually low.

Godey's Lady's Book.

The July number of this praise-worthy periodical, is on our table; and as usual is replete with choice engravings,—interesting and novel reading matter; also some beautiful specimens of poetry. It richly deserves a liberal patronage.

A Summary View of Matters and Things.

The noise and bustle, common to this place for a few springs back, in consequence of the heavy tide of emigration that passes through it, is over for this season.

Kanesville once more presents a pleasant scene. Health, peace, union, and harmony prevail among the citizens as far as we know, while, most of the cities and towns below us, on the Missouri River, have suffered severely from the fearful ravages of Cholera. Several cases of this disease appeared in St. Joseph, that proved fatal; the citizens of Weston, Independence, and other towns along the River, have had to lament the loss of many dear friends. Every thing with us, in this town, and county, hitherto have passed off very smoothly; combining advantages and disadvantages together, we have every reason to say, all is right, all is well. Our Merchants, Mechanics, and Farmers, have been busy, and now are, to a considerable degree. The merchants say, that they are doing a better business this season than they did last; notwithstanding the calm that seems to prevail, in our young and enterprizing village.

We love to see union and harmony existing among brethren. The sweet singer of Israel, on a certain occasion, gave vent to his feelings in acclamations of praise; while he, contemplated the beneficial effects, that would inevitably flow from the cultivation of these heaven-born principles. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" These words are the aspirations of a heart, said in sacred writ to be, after God's own. "As the dew of heaven that descended upon the mountains of Zion, so is Union among the Saints of the Most High, the Lord commandeth the blessing, even life for evermore."

If we take a retrospective view of the past history of nations, and kingdoms, that ranked among the strongest governments that ever existed among the sons of men, we all may learn a lesson, and profit thereby. What was the primary cause of their dissolution and final distruction? Their lack of union and interest, in one common cause. The cause of humanity, was there no other, should call forth our united effort, to overcome evil, and cleave to that which is good; but when higher and holier obligations devolve upon us as Saints of the Most High; it ill becomes us to be found dabbling in anything that is calculated to depreciate our real worth, or that would bring disrepute on the society of which we are members.

It does not hurt anybody to do good; neither would it diminish our real value, to be found trying to ameliorate the condition of others, as well as our own, by works of charity, forbearance, and virtue. The spirit of the Gospel of Peace, when properly diffused through society brings peace, joy, and comfort to every soul that receives it. Peace on earth, and good will to man, were the joyful tidings brought by angels, and communicated to man so that he might extend to his fellow, that which he had received himself.

Oh man! consider well your own condition, and real interest, if you do, you will take into consideration your neighbor's also. Society, we may say, is ordained of the Great Eloheim, to be a formidable bulwark against an assailing foe. It was not good for man in the beginning to be alone; neither is it now; society and government, have been, and are, established for the mutual protection, benefit, and happiness, of the governed, and those who govern; hence the necessity of viewing these matters, as they should be, with a single eye. Selfishness, bigotry, and Pride, have done more in their day to ruin man; than a Cæsar, an Alexander, or a Napoleon ever did. It is true, their life was a scene of carnage, and blood: but when contrasted before the eye of honor; the selfish, and bigoted, must recline into the shade.

The Saints' Festival in London.

We are in receipt of the London Sun, of June the 3d, by the last Mail. It contains the report of a feast, held by the Saints in that City, at the Freemason's Tavern, Great Queen Street.

Elder Eli B. Kelsey, Presided.

In addition to the principal leaders of the Saints in London, and the provinces, and in Scotland and Ireland; there were also present several brethren from America, France, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland and Sweden, who happened to come to the Metropolis, to visit the Exhibition.

Among the number we notice the names of Elder John Taylor, President of the French mission, —Lorenzo Snow, President of the Italian mission, —Erastus Snow, President of the Danish mission, and F. D. Richards, President of the British Isles.

Elder Thomas Squires, acted as Chaplain—Elder Cook, addressed the audience in behalf of the Fathers in Israel, in a very appropriate, eloquent, and pathetic manner. Mr. John Hyde Jr., delivered an address in behalf of the Young Men, illustrative of the rise and progress of the Church in America, and the British Isles.

The report being lengthy we are unable to give it a place in full, in our columns; but for the satisfaction of our readers, we clip the following extract:

The speaker then adverted to the progress of the Church in England, observing that in 1837, one year before the Saints reached Nauvoo, Elders H. C. Kimball and Orson Hyde, together with several others, landed at Liverpool, friendless and destitute. They seperated and went forth, preaching into the towns on either side. Preston first heard and obeyed the principles of truth. In eight months, seven hundred members met in conference in that town, rejoicing in the power and privilege of the Gospel. In a very short time, several counties, among which were Yorkshire, Cheshire, Lancashire, Stafford, Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, had heard and received the servants of God. Thus the Church increased, so that in 1840, after three years labor, the general conference reported 3,626 members, and 383 in the priesthood, making in all 4,019 Saints.

But such triumphant success was not confined to England; Scotland enjoyed a portion, and Ireland was also made to rejoice, and Wales testified by her thousands, how the Church had progressed in that province. In Scotland the blood-cemented pyramid of bigotry and superstition had been triumphantly attacked, although sustained by the proverbial wariness of the Scotch. The conference established in Edinburg, notwithstanding that hundreds had removed and hundreds more emigrated, still represented more than 1,500 members. Glasgow was also proclaimed, and over 2,063 members were now revelling in the enjoyment of the spirit of truth. In 1851 more than 3,530 had obeyed the mandates of Heaven, and thousands had, besides, emigrated to the gathering place of the Saints. As to Ireland, it was not until 1850 that Dublin had heard the principles of truth; he was, however, glad to say that a small branch had been established in that City.

In Wales, their success was still more great and glorious. In 1851, the number of Saints in the principality was 4,848, including officers. The statistics of January last showed there were, altogether, in the United Kingdom, 42 conferences, 602 branches, 22 seventies, 12 high priests, 1,761 elders, 1,590 priests, 1,226 teachers, 682 deacons, and 25,454 members, making a total of 30,747 Saints. During the last fourteen years more than 50,000 had been baptised in England, of which nearly 17,000 had emigrated from her shores to Zion. He next gave a brief sketch of the progress of the work in London. In February, 1841, the London Conference was organized, consisting of three branches—London, Woolwich, and Bedford, and composed of about 80 members. The number of members, in 1842, had increased 400 or 500, and the number of branches had more than trebled. During the last five years, 2,981 persons had yielded obedience to the Gospel. In the present year, the Conference fell to the Presidential charge of the present Chairman, Elder Eli B. Kelsey, whose knowledge had been tested, and whose actions spoke well for his wisdom and discretion. After an earnest appeal that he might be enabled to guide them aright in the blessed path before them, he concluded by expressing a hope that this might be a new era in the Conference, and that the epoch to come might be one of success, happiness, knowledge, and light.

Hymns, and Songs, and addresses from Lorenzo Snow, President of the Italian Mission, and Erastus Snow, of the Danish Mission, followed; and the meeting did not separate until rather a late hour. The utmost cordiality and good feeling prevailed among the large assembly until it was dismissed by the chaplain.

Sublime.

The following from the Alexandria Gazette, clearly demonstrates the feeling of a great number of the citizens of the South, toward the worthy President of this nation, and his Cabinet.

We have viewed his course, and believe the representation given in this article, to be a true one, which must appear apparent to every American citizen: We would rejoice to see this honorable, wise, and judicious statesman re-elected at the campaign of 1852, to fill the executive chair which he has hitherto so highly honored. His firm and undeviating course, in the performance of those duties imposed upon him by the constitution, at a period when peril and danger seemed almost inevitable, must for ever shed a halo of glory and honor around the character and person of the illustrious Millard Fillmore.

The Administration.

Order, regularity, harmony, strict performance of law, prompt execution of duty, and a faithful adherence to constitutional obligations, have marked the present Administration, and given to it a dignity and a character which even its opponents are forced to respect, and frequently to applaud. This praise, though high, cannot be disputed by unprejudicial men, in addition to this it may be said that the talents of the members comprising the Administration, their experience and their business qualifications, render them reliable and safe men—men in whom the people can have confidence, and upon whose judgement and sagacity they can depend.

If we look at the manner in which the public affairs entrusted to the management of the Administration have been attended to, since the accession of Mr. Fillmore to the office he holds, we must admit that every thing has been conducted successfully. Both our foreign relations and our domestic concerns are and have been superintended with great discretion and prudence. We suppose in minor details every body has not been suited, but generally satisfaction has been given, and party itself cannot rally an opposition upon the acts and measures of the Executive Department of the Government.

The moderation of the Executive, too, is to be considered and regarded. It is especially important, in the present condition of affairs, that we should not have an ultra administration. Neither the times nor the circumstances of the times are such as to authorize an Administration to take extreme ground. The temper of the people requires a conciliatory and compromising disposition. Firmness is absolutely necessary, but not passion or ultraism.

Upon the whole, we are confident that it is fortunate and happy for the country that we have at the head of affairs the statesman who now constitutes the administration. We entirely approve of their policy. We particularly approve of it as citizens of the South, and deeply interested in the prosperity of the South. We have so far found security, and we want to continue that state of security.

For the Guardian.

KANESVILLE, July 20th, 1851.

BR. D. MACKINTOSH:—

Thinking perhaps a little information from the first Company of emigrants, would be a treat to the friends abroad. I give you the following extract from a letter that I received last evening, from Sister R. R. Patten. Sister Patten left here about the first of May, in the first company of Mormon Emigrants, John G. Smith Captain, Roswell Stevens, Captain of the first fifty; Abraham Day, Captain of the second fifty; and L. A. Shirtliff, Captain of the third fifty. Sister Patten says they traveled up the divide between the Missouri River and the Horn, a distance of two hundred miles, it being a northerly direction, they then turned westward, traveled ten days, came to the Horn bridged and crossed, soon came to the Loup Fork, which they forded, from thence they crossed sand hills by hundreds, creeks and sloughs, by bridging with grass and brush, after considerable travel in this way they concluded to divide the company; Captain R. Stevens first fifty, continued westward; Capt's. Day and Shirtliff, second and third divisions, turned Southwest; and the California emigrants, seventeen wagons in company turned South, and after nine days travel, the second and third divisions came in with the California wagons, and on the 12th of July, reached the Platte Bottoms.

The health of the company was improved from what it was when they left here. There had been no sickness, no deaths, or accidents in the camps,—had lost only four head of cattle—had left no wagons, and lost no goods. She does not speak of having seen an Indian on the route.

Respectfully Yours,
E. M. GREENE.

Letter From George A. Smith.

PAROAN, IRON COUNTY,
May 17th, 1851.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GUARDIAN:

DEAR SIR:—I have for some time purposed giving you a description of this Valley, where the past winter a settlement was formed, County organized, &c. If you think it worthy a place in the columns of your valuable paper, you are at liberty to publish it.

The Colony forming this settlement, arrived at this point, two hundred and fifty miles South from Great Salt Lake City, the 14th of January last, and were composed of upwards of one hundred men, with many families, used to the mountains and the climate; after a cold and toilsome journey, across the different ranges of mountains in the winter season, we found ourselves in a beautiful Valley, spread out in length almost as far as the eye could reach, and of varied extent in width, surrounded by lofty mountains, covered with pine and cedar evergreens; watered by many streams flowing from the mountains, giving to us a scenery, bold in its outline, and beautiful in its landscape. After passing a number of streams we located ourselves at this place, and began our operations, opening roads in the kanyons, building bridges, exploring the country, making preparations for building a Fort, and preparing for the approaching Spring. The season in part favored us, and every man laid to with his might with the facilities around him to lay the foundation for a prosperous settlement; and at this time it looks as though the work of years had been accomplished.

In our explorations into the kanyons, we found abundance of the finest quality of Pine timber, of so large size, that scarcely enough small could be found without difficulty to build the houses composing the Fort, which now looks rather like a large town than a fort. We found the soil of the best quality varying in color, probably made by washings from the mountains which are principally composed of Lime Rock, Clay, Sandstone, (red and white,) and Iron Rock. This soil is pronounced by our farmers to be of the best quality; called in the States Lime land; but this is of a better quality. From the opening of the kanyons, the land has a gradual slope about six miles to a Lake, which is about sixteen miles long by two or more in width, called by the Indians "Parrowan" laying near the base of the opposite mountains, the Lake is strongly impregnated with Salt, Saleratus, Magnesia, &c., and has no visible outlet. Wood is here found in abundance near at hand, with Lime Rock, Stone Coal, Magnesia, Iron Ore, Plaster of Paris, Alum, Salt Stone for building, &c., which indicate strongly that this will be among the largest settlements in the mountains. There has already been many additions to our numbers, and our Fort is nearly completed, and will afford us all the protection necessary. There has been already one thousand acres of grain sown, the most of which is up and looks fine; our vegetables also has a fine appearance, and all indicate a bounteous harvest. The streams North and South of this point are large enough to afford many valuable mill sites, and also water many thousand acres of land. The stream called Coal Creek, fifteen miles south, is the largest in the Valley, the land about it is very fertile, the kanyons will afford plenty of wood and timber, here is found Stone Coal of a fine quality, and from appearance, will be in abundance. In this vicinity is large quantities of Magnetic Iron Ore, yielding not less than seventy-five per cent. The mountains seem composed of this Ore; here is also found Salt Ponds of considerable extent affording a beautiful specimen of Salt. The country generally is well watered, and every facility seems to offer inducements for the enterprising and industrious, and bids fair in a few years to become not only populous, but where will be found the wealth of long established nations, with that peace and happiness only enjoyed by those in pursuit to carry out the principles of liberty guaranteed by their Fathers. We have a Saw Mill in operation, and preparations are making for a Grist Mill, which will also soon be in operation; others will be built the coming season, affording the settler every convenience for his comfort. The base of the mountains and the valleys, afford one vast range for cattle, and herds, the grass being of a very nutritious quality. Other settlements will probably be formed this and the coming season, and the country will soon be covered with a dense population.

The large amount of emigration coming in will produce a home market for our surplus grain, and all the manufactured articles of iron or wood will be easily sold, in these vallies, thus reducing the price of all manufactured articles brought from the States. Governor Young and suit, are now on a visit to this Valley, and appear highly pleased with its location, and the many facilities it possesses. The climate is good, and none complain of ill health, all are in fine spirits, with every prospect of success.

This City is called Paroan

Respectfully I remain,
Yours, &c.
GEORGE A. SMITH.

Indians.

What is the reason so many Indians are tolerated about this town and seem to have so many sympathizers? The Curse of the Almighty shall rest upon the house or individual that encourages them to stay on this side of the river. It is well known that these red skins are the worst thieves in the world, and he who tolerates them about his house or place of business, in our estimation, does it to save of their spoils. A man will not keep a hawk except to catch birds with it.

ST. JOSEPH, July 26th, 1851.

EDITOR OF THE GUARDIAN:

SIR:— In the Guardian, some week or two since I noticed an article in relation to the great self-styled General Sutherland, in which you described the man, and spoke of his character so correctly, that I wish to express to you my admiration of your course, and not mine alone, but of this whole community. The same man of whom you spoke in that article, has been amongst us. He introduced himself here in a similar manner to that which he introduced himself in Kanesville. He would have had one believe that it was he who upheld our Government; and that to his wisdom we were indebted for all the blessings we enjoy. In his deportment here he was ungentlemanly and insulting, insulting even to females, upon whom he would intrude his company without invitation or ceremony. This conduct could not fail to render him detestable to every one.

He may and perhaps will, talk about you and your people wherever he goes, (he did not fail to do it here,) but I think it will be of but little consequence to your people, especially if you follow him with a few articles like the one above alluded to. To give you some idea of the respect they had for him in this community, it will just be necessary to say that he was egged while delivering a public lecture here.

You are the only one who has come out and told the truth about the egotistacated old scamp; and I can assure you that the Guardian containing the Sutherland article, has been read by almost every citizen of our town and county. You not only done your duty in so speaking of him, but you have enlightened the minds of many, who were not acquainted with the character, who had so basely slandered you.

VIRGINIUS.

Liquor Law.

MR. EDITOR:—As frequent complaints come to me, of the violation of this law, and as I understand, I am censured for not putting the law in force, against such as violate it; I thought it would be nothing but right to correct the minds of those who may be mislead on this subject, and do myself the justice to which I consider I am entitled.

It is well known by all who are acquainted with me, that I do not frequent those places commonly known as "Dram Shops," consequently, I would not be a very good witness in case of a prosecution, and no prosecution can be sustained without witnesses.

Those who come to me with complaints, have universally refused to make affidavit to their reports; yet they say it ought to be attended to, and wish me to do it. What consistency!

Who does not know that I can do nothing without proof. Are those who know of these things, and who consider them wrong; afraid to testify to what they know, that the law may be executed. If they are, I hope they will not trouble me any more on the subject. If any man comes to me with a report of a breach of the laws in future, in any case where he knows the facts, and refuses to make an affidavit to it, I shall conclude he is not telling me the truth, or is accessary; and certainly every person can see that he is at least willing to impose a burthen upon me, which he is unwilling to touch with one of his fingers. How unreasonable it is, to expect me to prosecute without evidence, what they are unwilling to do with all the evidence necessary to establish any fact, if their own words are to be relied upon.

I am sorry to learn that there are some among us who are violating this law with apparent indifference, from whom it would be supposed, better things might be expected, and who ought to be way-marks to others.

And now to conclude, I call on all good citizens, who know of any breach of the laws, to come forward and give their testimony, and thereby aid the execution of the law, and bring offenders to Justice.

Yours very Respectfully,
A. McRAE,
Sheriff, Pott. Co., Iowa.

Public Meeting.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Kanesville, held in the County Buildings, on Friday the 15th ult., the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

On motion Joseph E. Johnson, was chosen Chairman of the meeting, and Evan M. Greene Clerk.

Remarks were made by George W. Harris and Daniel Mackintosh, relative to the propriety of entering into certain measures for cleaning the streets, yards, houses, &c., in this town forthwith.

The Chairman proposed that a committee be appointed to investigate the general incorporation law, and report.

The Clerk read the law upon the subject, from the revised code; consequently no further action was taken upon said proposition.

The Chairman then proposed that a committee for cleanliness, or Board of Health, be appointed by this meeting, to see that houses, yards, and streets were kept clean, that manure, or any other obnoxious matter collected about dwellings or in the streets, were removed immediately; and that every citizen who would not comply with said rules, be reported to the Chairman of said Board, so that their names might appear before the public.

On motion it was voted that seven men be appointed to constitute a Board of Health, and that these seven, have the charge of seeing that the health of the citizens is not in jeopardy, in consequence of filth, or any other substance causing an unpleasant effluvia to arise in, or about the dwellings of any of the inhabitants.

On motion, C. C. Pendleton and E. M. Greene, were appointed to superintend Greene Street; Daniel R. Williams, Luke Johnson, and Joseph E. Johnson, Main Street; Daniel Machintosh, and Charles H. Bassett, Hyde Street.

The views of many of the citizens were expressed, relative to hogs being free commoners, &c; whereupon a motion was made and carried, that swine would not be permitted to ramble about town, and in the streets at large.

Daniel Mackintosh suggested the propriety of burning in the morning any and every species of matter collected in the streets; such as chips, straw, hay, and such like.—accepted.

On motion the meeting adjourned till Friday, the 18th, at 4 o'clock P. M.

JOSEPH E. JOHNSON.
Chairman.

E. M. GREENE, Clerk.

From the Deseret News, of May 31st.

About three hours after the arrival of the mail on the 24th, Pres'ts. Young and Kimball, and the accompanying party, were received in our midst in excellent health and spirits, with demonstrations of joy, from their visit to Utah, San Pete, and Iron counties. Those who went out sick returned home well. Heath, happiness, and prosperity pervade all the settlements of the Saints that have been visited. We hear many parts of the country very highly spoken of. The crops look well, and bid fair at all the settlements, and the labors of the brethren have been unremitting. The planning of the fort, and public grounds and houses; and the general execution of business manifested by Elder George A. Smith, and the brethren with him at Iron County; for safety, convenience, and profit, are represented as unequaled, and do great credit to their projector and executors. We hope to give more particulars hereafter.

Further Foreign Intelligence, by the steamer Europa.

We have Wilmer & Smith's Times, of the 14th, which came out in the Europa. The telegraph has anticipated most of the news of interest:

THE LOST NAVIGATORS—A GLEAM OF HOPE.—The report that a cairn of stones, raised by Sir John Franklin's expedition, had been discovered in Jone's Sound in 1848, by the Prince of Wales whaler, says the Liverpool Times, of the 14th, has received within those few days very distinct confirmation, rendering the statement by far the most important—presumptive or otherwise—which has yet reached us.

William Miller, a seaman on board the Prince of Wales, states, on oath, that he was on board that boat (whaler) in 1848, when, early in September, during very thick weather, they entered (as they believed) Lancaster Sound, and steered west, advancing slowly. The fog continued heavy for some days, when it suddenly lifted, and high land was seen on the larboard side, over the masthead. The captain being at first doubtful if it was the loom of icebergs or of land, sent a boat off to ascertain the fact, and of this party William Miller formed one. He states that on landing the marks of shoe prints were distinctly visible in the mud, above high water mark; close by was a small cooking place blackened by fire, and a little further on, a well built cairn, about four or five feet high, of which the party pulled away a few stones, but being recalled by a signal from the ship, which was being driven in shore by the current, were compelled to return on board immediately.

It was believed by the master of the Prince of Wales, the veteran Lee, of Hull, that he had advanced in a westerly course up this sound, a distance of nearly 150 miles, under the impression that he was in the Lancaster Sound; but this belief was removed on making his way outward, and the doubt confirmed by passing (to the south-ward) the wide opening and well-known head-lands of Lancaster Sound.

It became evident that he had been in the hitherto unexplored and more northern sound; named after Alderman Jones, a passage which, it has been believed, leads directly into the sea north of Parry Island. William Miller further declared that, at this point, the passage widened, and that an open sea with islands lay before them.

It is impossible to entertain any doubt that this cairn indicated the fact that some of Sir John Franklin's party have visited the spot in question; and we can have no hesitation in asserting that beneath the pile so carefully raised is deposited the distinct information of his past progress and future intention.

For the Guardian.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GUARDIAN:

SIR:—Thinking it might be a favor to the citizens of Kanesville, to know the law regulating "Lost Goods and ESTRAYS," I quote the following. "Any person taking up any estray beast, or finding any money or personal property, shall proceed therewith as follows."

"If the property does not exceed ten dollars in value, the finder shall put up two written advertisements containing a notice of the finding, and description of the property in two public places in the Township where it was found, and file one such notice in the County office, and if no owner appears within six months of advertisement, and prove his property and the reasonable charges, the property shall vest in the finder." If the property exceed ten and does not exceed thirty dollars in value, the finder shall within five days after finding, appear before a Justice of the Peace of the County, the County Judge or Clerk, and make a writen statement setting forth the time and place of the finding, and general description of the property, and the officer shall issue his warrant appointing two disinterested persons to examine and to report under their hands an appraisement, with an accurate description of the property setting forth all marks which may assist to indentify it. The report shall be sworn to by the appraisers, and by the finder also, as to state that the property named in it, is all which he has found, and that neither the property, nor any mark on the same has been altered or defaced by him, or by any other person with his knowledge; the Justice shall return the statement of the finder, his warrant, and the report of the appraisers with the affidavit, to the County office and the Clerk shall enter them at large in a book to be kept for that purpose, and shall post a notice of the finders statement, and the appraisers report on the door of the Court House, and the finder shall give such notice as before directed. If the property is appraised at more than ten and not more than thirty dollars, and no owner appears and proves his property, and pays the charges within nine months from the filing the papers with the Clerk, the property shall vest with the finder on his paying the costs of the above proceedings and not before.

Any Stallion or Jack, Bull, Boar, or Ram running at large, shall be accounted an estray."

Fashion.

Clear the Track for Pant——s and Tassels.

We confess that we were somewhat taken unawares, by our correspondent L., on the latest Ladies' fashion; but like all other rational beings we learn by the things that we suffer; and feel the impression more sensibly, than any other way; therefore, we have been on the outlook for the Department of Fashion ever since.

A La Capapie.

Gents Attention! A new style for Gentlemen's dress, made its appearance lately, in Monmouth, Illinois. It is a Sack Coat reaching to the hips, with Pants closely fitting the body and limbs, and fastened at the knee, after the manner of the Old Style, with long stockings to match. Tassels are attached to each knee, which completo the suit. Who is the warrior that will turn out Capapie, as a match for our Bloomers? Would'nt they look pretty? We wait to see.

Timon in speaking of gossips, says they havegot a happy faculty of marrying everybody out themselves.

POETRY.

For the Guardian.

To S. A. W.

'T was meat for thee, when all look'd dark,
And ev'ry friend my childhood knew,
Shrunk from the slight and vent'rous bark
As reckless through the waves it flew—
Unshaken still, to keep thy faith,
And through each gloomy storm that came,
To shield me, in thy pray'rs from scaith,
To keep me, in thy words from blame.

When narrow fears beset the base,
And selfish hopes o'ercame the mean,
'T was love alone, whose gentle face,
Look'd still unchanged through all the scene,
And with the darkness of the hour,
Thy truth but more conspicuous shone,
As some sweet star, when clouds have power,
Looks proudly out from Heaven alone!

Shall I not love thee, evermore,
Thou more than planet guide to me,
Whose gentle light, on sea and shore,
Still spoke thy true heart's constancy!
Oh, be time's changes what they will,
They cannot change that sleepless thought,
That tells—that teaches of thee still,
By thee, forevermore, still taught. L.

Life and its Struggles.

When crushed by fortune's stern control,
Or envy's blighting breath,
When keen despair is in thy soul,
And thou dost long for death;
Rouse up; life hath its sunny-side
All is not dark and drear;
Rouse up; and, arm'd with honest pride,
Resolve to persevere.

Let fortune frown, its tide may turn;
Life is not always sad;
And dark despair, Oh nobly spurn,
And thou shalt yet be glad.
Go forth, 'neath Heaven's arch of blue;
Regard not envy now;
But be to thine own manhood true,
With an unflinching brow.

Stand up, and know thyself a man,
And boldly round the look,
And see in Heaven's o'erarching span,
A wide mysterious book;
Yet read within its spangled page,
This truth, to cheer thy heart,
Press on, and live but for thine age,
And nobly bear thy part.

So for each hour of keen despair,
The future brings the joy.
Let not thine own heart be thy snare
Let not thy manhood cloy;
But ever foremost, ever bold,
Press on—press on, and know,
Life hath its pleasures to unfold,
E'en with its weight of woe.

MISCELLANY.

Fourth of July in South Carolina.

The birthday of this united nation seems to have furnished the chivalry with an occasion of controversy as to how it should be observed, or whether it should be observed at all. Mr. Rhett, we perceive by the Mercury, was to deliver an oration on that day in Charleston. Several of the provincial papers counsel that the festival should be studiously ignored, as having no significance to the chivalry under their existing relations to the rest of the Union; and one journal goes so far as to suggest that the feast shall be celebrated by the commission of an act of solemn and frightful perjury—by each son of South Carolina, in imitation of the old Roman, laying his hand upon the alter, and swearing, by the throne of God, to maintain an eternal hostility to the constitution and union of these States!

We do not wonder at the uneasy sensations manifested in South Carolina, at the approach of the anniversary of our independence. The consciousness of treason to that Union which resulted from the cruel sacrifices, the imminent personal hazards, and uncalculating patriotism, of our illustrious forefathers, must have rendered the image of Independence Day a Banquo's ghost to Mr. Barnwell Rhett and all his company—What could a South Carolina orator say on such an occasion? What but a miserable caricature of patriotism could he display, whose State allegiance leads him to deny constitutional obligations and federal ties! What a contradiction of the spirit of the day would be a labored attempt to justify political mutiny, by the allegation of imaginary wrongs and anticipated invasions of prerogative! Most uncomfortable to any sensitive secessionist must be the reminiscences of that day! What discord would such a spirit find in Yankee Doodle! What want of artistical beauty in the Star-Spangled Banner! And what logical incoherance in the reasoning of the Declaration of Independence! [—Tribune.

A Circular of the Postmaster General concerning Postage stamps says: To facilitate the pre-payment of postage upon letters and packages, postage stamps of the following denominations are provided and furnished by the Postmaster General, pursuant to the 3d section of the "act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851, viz:

No. 2, printed in red, representing the head of Washington in profile, of the denomination of 3 cents.

No. 3, printed in blue, representing the head of Franklin in profile, of the denomination of 1 cent.

These stamps will be furnished to one or more of the principal postmasters in each county who will be required to supply the other postmasters in their respective vicinities upon being paid for the amounts furnished.

The present five and ten cent stamps are useless after the 30th day of June, and such Postmasters as are authorized to sell stamps are directed to redeem such as are presented.

Bloomerism.

A man was seen near Broadway Saturday morning in petticoats, and with a bonnet on. When asked by the police why he wore this costume! he replied, "My wife has taken my clothes, and I have taken hers."

Why should a Man Swear.

I can conceive of no reason why he should, but of ten reasons why he should not.

1. It is mean. A man of high moral standing would almost as soon steal a sheep as to swear.

2. It is vulgar; altogether too mean for a decent man.

3. It is cowardly; implying a fear of not being believed or obeyed.

4. It is ungentlemanly. A gentleman, according to Webster, is a genteel man. Well-bred—refined. Such a one will no more swear than go into the streets to throw mud with a clod-hopper.

5. It is indecent; offensive to delicacy and extremely unfit for human ears.

6. It is foolish. "Want of decency is want of sense."—Pope.

7. It is abusive. To the mind which conceives the oath, to the tongue which utters it, and to the person at whom it is aimed.

8. It is venomous; showing a man's heart to be a nest of vipers, and every time he swears one of them sticks out of his head.

9. It is contemptible; forfeiting the respect of all the wise and good.

10. It is wicked; violating the divine law, and provoking the displeasure of Him who will not hold him guiltless who takes his name in vain.

"How beauliful falls
From human lips that blessed word Forgive;
Forgiveness—'tis the attribute of God—
The sound which openeth heaven: renews again
On earth lost eden's faded bloom, and flings
Hope's halcyon halo o'er the waste of life.
Thrice happy he whose heart has been so schooled
In the meek lessons of humanity
That he can give it utterance; it imparts
Celestial grandeur to the human soul,
And maketh man an angel."

A locomotive constructed by a journeyman engineer, for traveling on ordinary roads, arrived recently at La Villette, France. It travels, it is said, at the rate of from twenty-five to thirty leagues an hour; is of simple construction, an consumes little fuel. The locomotive came from Picardy, and all along the route the inventor was received with enthusiasm. On passing through Beauvais, he received the congratulation of the Prefect and other authorities, and the people carried him in triumph.

Virtues of Milk.

It is a most perfect diet. Nothing like it—it contains curd which is necesary for the developement and formation of muscle—butter for the production of an adequate supply of fat; sugar to feed the respiration, and thereby add warmth to the body; the phosphates of lime and magnesia, the peroxide of iron, the chlorides of potasium and soda, with the free soda, required to give solidity and strength to the bone, together with the saline particles so essentially necessary for other parts of the body. It contains lactic acid, or the acid of milk, which chemists inform us is the acid of the gastric juice, so requisite for the proper dissolving of our food in the stomach. It is therefore obvious that milk should be chemically correct in all its constituents, and that its beneficial effects on the constitution should not be neutralised by adulteration. "It is," Prout properly states, "the true type of all food." How necessary, therefore, is it that it should be pure; otherwise this wonderful and wise provision of providence would be a curse rather than a blessing.—[Bugg's Observation on Milk.

Charade.

BY AMICUS.

My first is the prettiest thing you will meet,
In traversing country or cities broad streets,
It is found with the miser, in each miserable cot,
And the first in all mischief, though far from a sot,
I am true to my mistress, though often mistrust her,
And when we are parted, but a bright lock is left her.
I am seen in the mists that enshroud the blue sea,
Though with loves tender missive, from loves darts I'm free.
I am flattered and petted by myself placed alone.
But abhorred and detested, when with others am thrown.
My second is found with the rich, noble and great,
And without me they hold not a princely estate,
With the poor, very seldom I chance to meet,
But when it so happens, I give a rich treat,
When my first has my second, 'tis an envious prize,
And might prove a rich treasure to one that is wise,
But my whole is the worst that befalls to mankind,
And the sorest calamity that on earth you'll find,
My whole is compound of 10 letters, of which please to spell.
4 geographical names—4 numbers—1 parts of a human body—
4 terms used in music—2 planetary names—9 animals and parts do—
11 names applied to human beings—14 vegetables and vegetable productions—
5 forms of water—5 mineral names—1 a band—
1 implying evil—1 a weight—1 a public place—1 a time of the year—
1 a useful article manufactured—1 a Compulsory Tax—
1 a subtle element—1 a place of great labor—
1 a branch of governmental economy—1 a troublesome thing—1 a specified period—

Matrimonial Secrets.—Sir Philip Sidney says: "What is mine, even to my life, is her's I love, but the secret of my friend is not mine."

Hear that, ye loving wifes and husbands, who communicate to each other, in certain confidence, in everything you know, and a thousand things you don't know and have no right to know—your own secrets, the secrets of your friends, and—the secrets of your imaginations! Hear that and reform your custom; and their word for it, there will be less envy, jealousy, bitterness, misunderstanding malice, and all other uncharitableness that there now is—to say nothing of scandal; slander, misrepresentation, gossip, and "lies of first-rate malignity."

Buffalo Fashion of Bloomers.

Storage, Forwarding, and Commission Business,

At Kanesville, Iowa, by

ORSON HYDE,—Editor of this paper.

IT is our design to enter into the above business, and having already made partial arrangements for receiving and forwarding heavy stocks of goods, wares and merchandize hence, to the Valley of the Salt Lake in the Spring, he flatters himself that his position and facilities will enable him to give general satisfaction, and thereby secure a liberal patronage.

He will receive in store all kinds of goods from the East, West, North or South; also shipments of produce by boat or wagon, and sell the same on commission if desired. Groceries received and sold on commission at wholesale only. Liberal cash advances made on all property left in charge. Flour, Bacon, &c., &c.

Letter from George A. Smith, to his Son in the Great Salt Lake Valley.

CEDAR CITY, IRON CO., DESERET, February 13th, 1851.

MY DEAR SON:—As the falling snow drives me into my wagon, I take my pen to give a few words of advice to you my dear Child, form whose society I am by duty called. Leaving you at a time, when you much need a Father's watchful care, to the charge of your Mother, in your ninth year you are no doubt beset by many temptations, and as you are now forming your character for life, you must remember the value of time, and give every possible attention to the acquirement of knowledge; remember, my son, thy Creator in childhood; and every Sabbath day be sure to attend to the Church, and hear the instructions there given; be careful to conduct yourself well, and remember as much of the preaching as you can. Never indulge in swearing or profane language; keep out of the company of such boys as use vile language of any kind. Study always to know what is right before you act, and then go ahead, and in this way you will seldom do wrong. In thy heart pray to the Lord in all sincerity at all times, to direct thy ways in wisdom; and never do anything that will be displeasing to the Lord or your parents in the secret place or openly. When school is done, go directly home, and do not play by the way or loiter your time away. Make the best improvement of your time at school, for you will soon be a man, then you will have use for all you can learn; and if you squander away your time at school you will always be sorry for the loss of what you cannot regain: take all the pains in your power to make your mother comfortable, and never go and leave her without her knowledge and consent, and when you come back tell her where you have been and what you have been doing in your absence. In this way you will make her always feel safe about you, and you will be kept from many difficulties. Make a practice of going to bed early and get up early in the morning, and your mind will be clear and you can learn faster than by sitting up late. The habit of doing business in the night councils which I have attended has been injurious to health, and am gradually going out of the practice.

My son, for the improvement of your language, when reading; every word you do not understand the meaning of, refer to the Dictionary, and learn the definition, and pronounciation, and the way of spelling at once. In this way you will, in reading a few books get a command of language much easier than any other way. Take all the care you can of your sister: as she is large enough to go school with you, watch over her that no accident may happen to her, and help her to learn all you can, as this will encourage her and make you more perfect in the same studies.

Make yourself as intimate with your little brothers as you can, and cultivate the most affectionate feelings with them, for by so doing you can do them much good in time to come; impressions formed in the cradle are often lasting and very valuable, and they will be apt to follow your example. And I pray God to preserve you in the path of virtue and honor all the days of your life, and make you an ornament to society.

Zepha often speaks of you, and says you are the best boy she knows of. Try and do well, for a good name is better than gold. Always speak the truth, even if it is against yourself, for God has said thou shalt not lie, and he will not hold him guiltless that bears false witness. He that tells a lie cannot be believed when he speaks the truth. Maintain an honest heart always and then you can hold up you head any where. If any boys of your acquaintance entice you to do little tricks, steal, or take care of what they have got dishonestly, shun their company; for a boy is known by the company he keeps. Poor Tray was cruelly treated for being found in bad company. Never rob a melon patch or fruit garden, a meaner act cannot be done than to steal melons.

I want to see you very much. I am doing all I can to make a good place here; my house is commenced, and I have got out half my Mill timber. The storm is so severe to-day that I am writing, and all the hands are idle about the camp. Give my love to all the family, and take all the pains to make your grandfather and mother comfortable.

My son, learn to read writing, and you will learn to write better than I do, I hope, before long.

I am, as ever, your affectionate Father,

GEORGE A. SMITH.

CHARLESTON IN DANGER!—At one of the celebration on the Fourth in South Carolina, the Southern Standard says:

Edmund Bellinger, Esq., asserted "that if the commercial interest of Charleston were a clog to the State, then he agreed with Capt. Allen, that we had better make a second Moscow of the city."

Capt. Allen is worthy of holding a commission under the Czar for this bright thought. But if Charleston is to be destroyed, how is the Yankee revenue cutter to receive that broadside from the British steamer! Will British steamships trouble Charleston with its trade after the city is laid in ashes!

The emigration from South Carolina is said to be very great. Her citizens are leaving her with a view of getting rid of the everlasting turmoil kept up by her politicians about the aggressions of the "central despotism" at Washington.

The wife is, the sun of the social system. Unless she attracts, there is nothing to keep heavy bodies, like husbands, from flying into space.

For the Guardian.

ST. LOUIS, July 31, 1851.

MR. EDITOR:—Thinking that it might be interesting to your readers, to hear from their friends in St. Louis, I write this communication, and forward it for publication, if you deem it wisdom.

Their is a large and respectable congregation of Saints in this City, who attend public worship every Sunday, in the Concert Hall, Market street. This large and spacious room is generally crowded to excess, with Saints from almost every nation under heaven; the feeling prevailing among us is good, and the Saints greatly rejoice in being liberated from bondage and enjoying the spirit of the Lutter-day work.

We have had the cholera this seasc to a considerable extent, and the Saints in this City, have not escaped without suffering its direful effects; quite a large number have fallen its victims,—among the number were Elder John Halliday, late President of South Conference, England, and Elder William McKeellie, from Glasgow, Scotland. In consequence of so much sickness, and death, a goodly number of poor brethren and sisters have been left on our hands; but so far, we have been able to relieve all those who were really destitute. In consideration of the increase of sickness, I suggested to the Council of the Branch, and they agreed, that Sunday the 21st of June, be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer, and to call upon God unitedly to stop the ravages of this disease in the midst of his people; also to contribute of their substance to feed the poor. Our meeting on that day were well attended, the Hall was full. We had a good time; the spirit of God was in our midst, and all things were done decently and in order. We fasted from Saturday eve till Sunday afternoon's service was over; where we broke our fast by receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The evening was set apart to receive the free-will offering for the poor. There were meetings held in each ward—the Saints brought their offerings and presented them to the Presidents; in this, as on usual occasions the Saints sustained their credit for liberality. One hundred and sixteen dollars was collected, and distributed to the worthy, and real destitute cases.

On Sunday, the 29th of June, we agreed in Council, to have three discourses delivered in the Hall, and invite our friends the citizens to come and hear, at each meeting, to take up a collection for the benefit of the widows and orphans. Accordingly we advertised the meetings, subjects, speakers, and object. The Republican; Organ, and Reveille, noticed the same in appropriate editorial articles; which kindness from them we highly appreciate.

The meetings were well attended—the collection amounted to forty-two dollars and thirty cents.

You will perceieve, that we are up and doing, and feel to continue to do all the good we can.

You will please excuse this intrusion upon your columns.

I remain your Brother,
In the Everlasting Covenant.
THOMAS WRIGLEY.

Etoile Du Deseret.

ETOILE DU DESERET, is the name of a new Star which has recently appeared in the moral firmament. It was first discovered by Elder John Taylor, in Paris. It is determined to be of the first magnitude, and was first noticed by the naked eye, some time in the month of May. Already observations have been taken from it in Denmark, Switzerland, Italy, the United States of North America, and in different parts of England, Wales, and Scotland, to say nothing of the interest awakened by its appearance generally in different portions of France, and in the Channel Islands, where we are informed it commands particular attention.

It is with no small degree of pleasure we welcome the first number of this "Star of Deseret," published in the French language, by reason of which it will no doubt obtain an extensive circulation on the continent, as that language is extensively spoken among all the western nations of Europe. The Saints have already begun to derive edification, instruction, and comfort from its perusal in different States of continental Europe, and we doubt not the "Etoile du Deseret" will soon obtain a circulation which will amply encourage and repay the exercise of that master-talent with which it has been commenced. The sheet before us is a royal octavo, and printed in beautiful clear type — seems to be just the medium for communicating the principles and doctrines of the Editor, and of the Latter-day Saints, to its French readers, indeed, we consider it par excellence.—[Millennial Star.

THE NEW POSTAGE LAW.—Baltimore, July 3—The Postmaster General has addressed the following letter to the editors of the Baltimore Patriot, answering their inquiry wether bona fide subscribers in the city who have papers sent them to different summer retreats for less than three months are considered as transient subscribers and postoge exacted accordingly.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Appointment Office, July 7, 1851.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to yours of the 1st inst., you are informed that all newspapers sent for a less period than three months, whether sent from the office of publication or otherwise, will come under the head of transient newspapers, upon which the postage must be pre-paid at the office where mailed.

Your obedient servant,
FITZ HENRY WARREN.

The Art of Flying.

A French journal has a letter from Madrid giving an account of a successful experiment with a new aparatus for flying. The flyer was a Miss Juanita Perez, who though rather fat and corpulent, moved through the air by the help of wings, with great ease and rapidity. She was advertised to fly a distance of above 1,200 feet, rising in the air above 600, but exceeded the programme both in height and distance. No description of the structure of the wings is given. They have a spread of some fifteen feet, are fastened by ligaments of great flexibility, and arranged so as to move with great rapidity; they make a noise like a wind-mill. The astonishment of Madrid at so novel a phenomenon is described as immense.

A Mr. Thomas Darville, at Paris, also announces that he has invented a complete apparatus for flying, and that he proposes to exhibit it at the Camp de Mars in the course of the present month, when he will fly from the Military School to Challiot. He will be accompanied by his two sons, one of twenty-two and the other of seventeen years. The preparation of three sets of wings has delayed the exhibition until now. The inventor has tried his apparatus privately, with complete success, having flown across the Seine with it at 1 o'clock in the morning. His wings have a spread of fifteen feet, and by their help the flyer can move up and down in the air with all the facility of a swallow, skimming along near the ground or mounting upright to the sky at his pleasure.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

ANNAPOLIS, July 12, 1851.

A disease is now raging in the county of Anne Arundel, between South and West rivers, which has proved to be as fatal as the cholera. The early stage of it is marked by an eruption of the skin, a swelling of the muscles of the throat, partaking of the character of scarlet fever in children, and attended apparently with very slight fever. There is nothing alarming in this stage of it, which continues for three or four days, when all upon a sudden it fixes itself upon the vitals with a violence and fatality which are arrested by nothing that has, as yet, been tried. Dr. John H. Sellman, a physician of a very highly valued professional reputation, in extensive practice, and a citizen of the county, esteemed and beloved by all who knew him, most unexpectedly, on yesterday, fell a victim to its ravages. He leaves a widow and seven small children to mourn their irrepairable loss. Several of his brother's servants who he had attended, had died with this disease, and from whom it was thought he had taken it. I learn that another of his family of servants also died with it on yesterday.

A Newspaper! What is it?

It is a Bill of Fare, containing a variety of dishes, suited to the different tastes of those who sit down to be entertained.

Politics is derived from Latin word Politicus; which means, exercising sagacity in devising, and pursuing measures adapted to promote the public welfare. This dish is set foremost on the tab'e, and being the most substantial, we call it beef steaks, because it generally suits the taste of almost every one.

Congress and legislative news, are stuffed meats, rich and spicy.

Electioneering is venison, best dried.

Essays, humorous, speculative, moral and divine; we call plum cakes.

Poetry, is custard.

Marriages are sweet-meats, pleasant to the use; but destructive to the abuse.

Ballads and Love Ditties, are plum puddings.

Anecdotes, Conundrums, Enigmas, and Charades, are spice mustard.

Advertisements, are the raisins, oranges, &c. usually distributed as a desert.

Editorials, are wine to exhilerate the guests.

A Dun, is Sour Crout, and Cranberry Tart.

Denmark.

By the politeness of Elder Erastus Snow—of the Twelve—and president of the Danish Mission, we are favored with a copy of the Book of Mormon in the Danish language. This divinely inspired record can now be read by a large portion of the inhabitants of Scandinavian Europe, many thousands of whom are familiar with the language who do not reside in the provinces of Denmark. It has already gone into the northern parts of Germany, and also somewhat freely into Sweeden, where both books and elders are loudly called for. Upon the appearance of the first sheets of this work in print, the Saints in Copenhagen seemed endowed with new power from on high. The Holy Ghost descended mightily, and bore witness of its truth to the new born babes in Christ by divers manifestations; to some in open vision, confirming them in the faith, and causing the church to rejoice greatly in this record that has sprung out of the ground, and in the righteousness of God which has again looked down from heaven. The labors of the last twelve months in Denmark have resulted in the translation and publication of the Book of Mormon, several small tracts, illustrative of the faith of the Saints, and the establishment of the church there, by the baptism of 261 souls; about 150 of whom constitute the branch of the church in Copenhagen, the capital of the nation; and and about 70 constitute a branch of the same in Aalborg, the principal town of the province Jylland (Jutland).

Elder Snow, with whose company we are at present favored, intends soon to return to Denmark, and with the additional aid and influence of the "stick of Joseph" in his hands, and that of his fellow-laborers, will be able to present the doctrines of our holy faith to the people in a much more ample and competent manner, besides being able to employ his own active policy more generally among the people, which give promise, under the divine blessing, of a numerous and powerful ingathering of souls into the Gospel net. Truth is mighty, and does already prevail, in the sphere and extent in which it has its application to the people. "Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel; according to this time it shall be said of Jacob, and of Israel. What hath God wrought?

New Route to the Pacific.

We have advices from New Grenada that an exclusive grant has been made to a party of American capitalists, of the privilege of forming a Canal or Railroad communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the Attrato and San Juan Rivers, the former running into the Atlantic and the latter into the Pacific. This new route presents some highly favorable features for a Canal. —[N. Y. Tribune.

GREATER THAN GOLD LAKE.—Rumors have been rife of late that the veritable "Laguna d'oro', had been found, and all the tales told of its untold riches, have proved more than true.

Whatever be the case, this is a fact that near Rich Bar, on the north fork of Feather river, another bar has been struck were seven hundred claims were taken up in one day.

Those who had gone to work were getting from forty to fifty ounces per day. The intelligence, from such good authority, can hardly be doubted.

The neighbourhood is known to be one of the richest, forty three men out of one hundred having gone home this year with fortunes, after a single season at Rich Bar.

The Sonora Herald gives very encouraging accounts from the different placers in the vicinity of the city of Sonora.

The whole cost of the New York and Erie Railroad is put down at $23,900,000 and the value of the real estate along the line is supposed to be increased that much.

Andrew Jackson Davis, the celebrated clairvoyant, has come out in an atheistical declaration of Independence, in which he asserts his disbelief in the bible, the church, and society as it now exists, and devotes himself to the removal of these evils from the earth. He thinks he has outgrown them all.

Important to Farmers.

The Hartford Times mentions a farmer who took up a fence after it had been standing fourteen years, and found some of the posts nearly sound, and others rotted of at the bottom. Looking for the cause he discovered that the posts which had been inverted from the way they grew were solid, and those which had been set as they grew were rotted off. This is certainly an incident worthy of being noted by farmers.

Crops.

We clip the following from the St. Louis Union, of the 5th inst.:

The Crops and the Harvest.

CROPS—OHIO.—The Cincinnati Enquirer, says, that the yield in Ohio promises to be greater than that of last year. The country papers, it says, are full of the most cheering accounts.

Pennsylvania.

It is universally conceded there never was a better promise of an abundant harvest than is now presented.—[Washington Examiner,

Maryland.

The accounts from all sections of Maryland concur in the opinion that the present wheat crop of Maryland will be among the largest and best ever gathered within its limits. The season has been extremely favorable for wheat and grass and the process of securing both is now going on industriously throughout the States.—[Balt. American.

Indiana.

The wheat harvest is finished in central Indiana, and a large crop has rewarded the labors of the husbandman. There is a fine prospect of a great yield of corn in that section.—[Intelligencer.

Arkansas.

The Fort Smith Herald, of the 13th says: We learn from a gentleman who lives in Benton County, that the crops in that county, and the adjoining county, of the Cherokees, are very fine, and promise a rich harvest. The wheat crop he says, is the best he has ever seen in his life.

Crops.

It is gratifying to be able to chronicle the fact that scarcely if ever, had the crops looked as promising in this and some of the adjoining counties, as they do at the present time. The wheat crops just harvested, we learn, was never better.—[Springfield (Mo.) Flag.

Harvest.

The farmers in this County commenced harvesting their wheat the first of this week. The crops are said to be better than was expected.—[Devenport Banner, 18th.

Michigan.

From all parts of the State we have the most flattering reports as to the coming crops. The present season bids fair to be one of the most prosperous to our farmers ever known in the history of our State.

The coming wheat crops here promise to surpass that of any other State.—[Detroit Free Press.

Kentucky.

The wheat crop in this county is said to be better than an average one. The grain is not quite so heavy, but it has been harvested in a good condition; no rust, or any of the various ills that this crop is heir to, affected the new crop.—[Hopkinsville, Ky. Whig.

COUNCIL POINT, July 29th, 1851.

MR. EDITOR:—There is one important point in the making of wagons, if understood, that is greatly neglected to be put in practice. The joint in the tongue and hounds forward of the fore axletree in order to have a load ride easy, should be equalized on the fore wheels, as well as on the hind; and the fore-end of the box ought never to go more than two or three inches forward of the joint in the tongue already mentioned.

When the fore wheels drop down in a ravine, or any other mud hole; the fore end of the box will strike on the tongue; therefore the hounds that crosses the fore axletree ought to be made longer than they generally are.

Americans in London—The American Anniversary of Independence.

This anniversary was celebrated on the 4th, by a grand concert, ball and supper, given to the Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence, by Mr. Peabody. The large Hall of Willis' room was the scene of the entertainment, and appropriately decorated with flags and emblems. The American eagle and colors on a large scale adorned the wall at one end, and were suspended over a portrait of Washington, while on the lower end was a portrait of our Queen, with the appropriate arms of England. Though, in characteristic compliance with American taste, the lion and unicorn figured in miniature opposite the gigantic representation of the eagle, stars and stripes, this fact was only noticed by the hypocritical, and affected not the spirit and gaiety of the assembled crowd. The company comprised many of the high personages of England, in addition to all the most favored of the natives of the United States at present in London. The Duke of Wellington walked in at half-past eleven, and was received with several rounds of cheers, the band playing the usual heroic song that greets the veteran of Waterloo. Sir George Grey, was also present, as well as other distinguished persons. The concert, which comprised most of the vocal talent now in London—such voices, for instance, as those of Catharine Hayes, Sofie Cruvelli, Gardoni, and Lablache—was followed by dancing, which was kept up with the greatest animation. The lateness of the hour alone prevents us from noticing the proceedings at the supper, which proved, no doubt, conducive to the pleasure of all present. Need we say that the whole scene was emblematic of the good understanding which now so happily reigns between England and the United States.—[Daily News.

Highly Important News from Salt Lake and the Plains—More Indian Depredations.

By the last mail from Salt Lake we received the Deseret News up to June 28th. It contains several interesting items for the Saints; more especially a document from several brethren there, to the scattered Saints in the Eastern States, Kanesville, &c. Mr. Thomas Bateman with ten others have just arrived from the Plains, bringing intelligence from the different emigrating companies for the valley this season,—also a very interesting letter from President Orson Hyde and company; whom they met 105 miles this side of Laramie.

Mr. B. says: that he met several California companies, two day's travel from the Valley getting along remarkably well, with little or no sickness—Met A. W. Babbitt, and a number of the Government officers for Utah, 200 miles on the other side of Fort Laramie progressing slowly; he represents their animals being very much jaded, through their long and tedious journey—in every other respect were well and in good spirits. They met Captain Stevens' company about 350 miles out, proceeding on their journey without molestation. There was a company of about 300 hundred wagons in the sand hills, where the Indians had assailed Elder Hyde, and company; fears were entertained of their safety, as there were 300 Pawnee Indians who had taken their position with the sole intention of robbing and plundering any emigrants coming that way—this gang of thieves expected an additional force from the Omahas; but they were disappointed; the latter chose rather, to abide the counsel given their chiefs sometime since, by Elder Hyde, Judge Brocchus and several others at a council held in this town previous to the Elder's departure for the Valley. Mr. Bateman states, that he and his little company left the Valley on the 12th of June with ox-teams,—they arrived here August 12th, making the entire distance in two months—the quickest trip yet, by oxen.

John Brown's Company were met at the junction of the new road, two hundred and forty miles from Winter Quarters, on the 25th of July, getting along well.

After reading President Hyde's letter,—extracts of which we give below; we think that the government should open their eyes, and feel somewhat interested in the welfare of American Citizens moving to Salt Lake, Oregon, and California for the purpose of enhancing the value of Government lands by cultivation. If the emigrant is not to be protected—and immediate measures entered into by the Department to check the further hazardous movements of these Indians, hundreds of Oregon Emigrants have said in our office that emigration will cease for that quarter after this year. Already, letters have been sent back to their friends, to warn them not to proceed, until a sufficient force is placed by government on the Frontier to protect them.

Just as we are writing this article, another letter is received from John Crombie, a young man in the employ of Dustin Amy. Mr. A. killed his cream colored horse while endeavoring to effect his escape from the Indians, and ran one of his mules so badly, that it is with great difficulty it can keep up with the train.

The writer says, that Hon. Judge Brocchus, of Ala., Mr. Wm. H. Gooch, and Mr. Walker, of this place, shared the same fate that Elder Hyde received. Rumor reports that they lost all their clothing with the exception of pantaloons and shirts.

Letter from Elder Orson Hyde.

ON THE PLATTE RIVER, 108 MILES EAST OF LARAMIE, July 22d 1851.

DEAR BR. MACKINTOSH:—

I have just met Mr. Bateman, from the Valley, and I write you by him a hasty scroll.

On the 11th inst., near one branch of the Loupe Fork, we were assailed by a party of about three hundred Pawnee Indians, and robbed of between seven and ten hundred dollars. There were only seven of us, and about three hundred of them. I lost about eighty dollars worth of blankets, gun, clothing, camp furniture, and provisions, besides my Jim Horse; but he fought himself clear from them and I redeemed him by paying forty dollars.

We are now all well and in good spirits. The forward emigrants are now nearly at Laramie. Capt. Smith's three fifties were not robbed by the Indians, as they had passed before the Indians had taken their position on the route. I fear the remaining companies will suffer much by their depredations. I am now satisfied that there was a concerted plan between the Omahas and Pawnees, to rob and plunder the trains; but the Omahas stand back by reason of our talk with the chiefs, and leave the Pawnees to act alone. The Pawnees told us that they expected the Omahas up there and asked us if we had seen them?

The route is a very bad one in consequence of the trains turning down to the Platte after crossing the Horn, instead of heading that stream and keeping up between the running water, and Loupe Fork. There will be a great scarcity of water, for the accommodation of the emigrants in passing over the numerous sand hills and ridges, on this route. Br. Orson Pratt lost his horses after crossing the Missouri River, at Winter Quarters. He supposed the Omahas had stolen them. The Government will probably chastise these Indians for their robberies,—they richly deserve it.

We have had but one rain storm since we started; but that was severe and heavy.

Mr. Bateman can tell you some of the news from the Valley. This route that we have come is about one hundred and fifty miles longer than the usual one, while the route contemplated would have been rather nearer than the old one. But I have no complaints to make, or reflections to cast upon any one.

Remember me kindly to my wife and family, and tell them not to be over anxious about me. We have been mercifully relieved of much of our loading to our own serious inconvenience, but to the great relief of our teams.

Truly, your Friend and Brother,
ORSON HYDE.

STILL LATER

From Salt Lake and the Plains.

Tuesday morning, 19th inst., seven hearty, and hardy, good-looking men dropped in upon up us, about six o'clock. They left Salt Lake on the 15th ultimo, making the entire distance in thirty-four days.

Their names are as follows: Andrew J. Langley, from Salt Lake; Peter Shelton, formerly of Warren Co., Illinois, late from Oregon; Harvey S. Allen, of Jackson Co., Iowa; G. A. Thomson, of Kane Co., Illinois, George Griffith, of Kane Co., Illinois; Alexander J. Ford, of Mishwauki Co., Michigan and Hyrum F. Dunham, of Milwauki, Wisconsin, late from California.

The gentlemen from California say; that they were nine days in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in Snow; during which time they fed their horses on one pint of flour per day, to each horse.

Mr. Langley says; that the inhabitants of the Valley, lost by Indian depredations, cattle, horses, and mules, to the amount of twelve thousand dollars. There Indians infest Little Salt Lake; also Brown's Settlement—at both places, it is stated that they stole considerable, to the serious inconvenience and loss of some of the residents of those places.

They report the crops in the Valley, more especially wheat, to be super-abundant and very heavy this season; the health of the citizens there is very good; while peace, union, and harmony, are the prominent features in their social circles.

Mr. L. says; that they met Phineas Young, and General Brown of this place, five miles this side of the Valley; A. W. Babbitt and Company, fifty miles this side; President Hyde and his company, thirty-three miles on the other side of Fort Laramie, getting along remarkably well, enjoying good health, and buoyant spirits.

Met a company of Oregon, and California emigrants, twenty-six miles on the other side of said Fort, enjoying the same blessings as the former, and progressing on their journey without any trouble.

Captain Smith and his company, were met on the 1st inst., four miles on the other side of Laramie; Stevens' company, five miles east of the Fort; Captain Day's in sight, and Captain Cumming's company of one hundred wagons, ten miles on the other side of Ash Hollow. Shirtliff's company of fifty wagons, were met five miles in the rear of Cumming's train; and Captain John Brown with the emigrating poor, twenty-two miles this side of Ash Hollow. Wilkin's merchandize train consisting of ten wagons, with a Scotch company in the rear, were met at, or near, the same place they met Mr. Brown's company; also Gordon's. Next day, they met Father Allred's company, the other side of Cold Springs, and Elder Orson Pratt's company at the Springs, proceeding on their journey finely.

Mr. Shelton, one of the company from Oregon, met six hundred and seven wagons between Williamette Valley and this place, for Oregon; also 72 wagons, from the junction of the roads; the latter were bound for California.

The spirit manifested by this last company from the Valley, is of an entire different character, from the one exhibited by Mr. Bateman, and his company.

Mr. Langley, and his associates bring news of a cheering character; while Mr. B. brought nothing but darkness, gloom, and dissatisfaction. We can easily account for the difference; Mr. Bateman came here, cut off from the Church for disturbing the peace, and quietude of the Saints in the Valley, and for assuming the character, and position, of Elijah the Prophet; all the representation he could give, was like himself, of the darkest kind; everything there, was out of order in his estimation, and the Saints would not allow him to set matters right. No wonder! If we ever saw a fool and a liar, embodied in one person; we are satisfied that we are not mistaken when we say, that both appear very conspicuous in the personage of this would-be Modern Elijah, alias the great Thomas Bateman, who, not many years ago, ran through the streets of Kanesville, as crazy as a loon, with a red flag in his hand. The Saints should beware, of this modern dignitary, he has been hurled from his standing in the Church of God, and now, like Lucifer, the Son of the Morning, he goes about accusing the brethren in the Valley; and seeking whom he may devour.

Some say; that he intends to visit Washington, and lay his grievances before the President; but we venture to say that he, like BILL SMITH, is only laying a snare for others; into which, he, himself, will ultimately fall.

To Parents and Children.

We wish the Saints to read Elder George A. Smith's letter to his Son; and also read it to their children. The reader will find it on the first page of this paper.

C. C. Rockwell Esq., Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, of this State, will please accept our thanks for a copy of the Journal of the House of Representatives.

News from the Traveling Elders.

We are in receipt of a letter, from Elders Candland and Brown, dated Livingston Co., New York, June 6th, which contains the cheering news of several being added to the Church in that section; and because the truth has taken hold of the hearts of the honest, the Priests, as usual, are up in arms against it. We are glad to hear from Br. David, because we thought the field of his labor was rather a hard one, and for a while it proved to be so; but now, he says, that he has succeeded in awakening the Saints there, to a sense of their duty, and the honest in heart to investigation.

Elders Murray and Ross, writes from West Elizabeth, Pa., under date of July 18th, where they have added to the Church by Baptism, twenty-three members; besides, stirring up the Saints to diligence, in the performance of their respective duties, and callings.

Isaac Bullock, writes from Williamstown, Oswego Co., New York; at which place, he is to raise his voice to the Saints, and to all others who may feel inclined to hear. Br. B. accomplished a good work in Kirtland; he struck in there, under Gladden Bishop's nose, and re-baptised quite a number of those who once were members; but who, because of offences, trangression, and trouble, thought all was over, and that it would be of no use for them to follow the Church any longer.

We have received several other letters, which say: that in many places, the Saints are literally dead to the work of the last days,—they serve the creature, and their dimes, more than they do the Creator. The Elders say; that they have sometimes to use the Rod to wake them up.

As a general thing the people at large; apart from the Saints, are fast asleep in the arms of traditional sectarianism, and a corrupt Priesthood; without God, or any substantial hope in the world, and seem to care but little what comes, provided, they are making money.

As an instance of the fact, we copy an extract, from a leader in the Boston Daily Mail, of the 12th ult., headed; "MORE ABOUT THE MORMONS." The Editor labors hard, to prove to the very letter, a prophecy of the Apostle Peter's; referring to the scoffers in the last days, which reads as follows: "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying; where is the promise of his coming? For since the Fathers (Apostles) fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of Creation."

Now reader, compare the foregoing paragraph with the following extract from the Mail:

"Now as a matter of fact, the world has seldom seen or known a time of more profound peace. As to the dissentions in the Church, these have existed ever since there was a Church, and we are not aware that any new element of discord is at work now. On the contrary, there is confessedly much more harmony among different sects of professing Christians than there was at almost any other stage of ecclesiastical history. Earthquakes and tornadoes have occurred in all ages; and although steamboat explosions are comparatively a modern invention, yet their blessings will undoubtedly be felt for years to come."

Who is the man that knows anything; that does not know that this extract, exactly corroborates with Peter's testimony? We leave the reader to judge.

Suggestions.

Since the issue of our Extra of the 13th inst., containing an Epistle from several brethren in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake; several persons have called upon us, inquiring what they should do? Our answer invariably have been; do the best you can lawfully, to procure an outfit, so as to be ready to start next Spring for that place.

If you are a farmer, place your farm, and other improvements in such a condition, as to render them saleable, that, if a purchaser should come, all your effects may be in good repair, and be worth something to you, should a sale be effected. If you are a mechanic; use your utmost endeavors to make all that you possess available in the Spring to buy you an outfit; and leave no stone unturned, so that when that period arrives, you may be right side up with care, and ready to start at the word Go.

If you are anything at all, be doing something that is right, lawful and just in view of your removal; and God will bless the labors of your hands, as he did in former times the Widow's cruse of Oil, and measure of Meal, withal, remembering the Lord in all your various vocations in life.

Some have said to us, I am too poor! I have nothing to go with! Well brethren, the Lord does not gather, where he has not strewed; therefore, if you enjoy health, be of good cheer, your case is not hopeless; from this time henceforth, be diligent in business,—add to that which you have already acquired, by industry, economy, and moderation in all things; which if you do, we venture to say; that the Judge of all the earth will do right—remember you, and perhaps relieve you from many inconveniences; his ear is not heavy that it cannot hear; neither is his arm shortened that it cannot save, provided you are in a position worthy of being saved; and should misfortune's blighting hand, turn the current of events against you, and hinder you from proceeding on your journey next Spring,—keep your eye on the mark—work on, you will reap, if you faint not.

If the Saints would only consider, and understand the import of the parable of the Mustard Seed, they might profit thereby. Jesus said: If you have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you. Mustard seed is said to be among the least of all seeds, yet, it has germinating properties, and acquiring powers, by which it collects matter of a similar character from the soil the surrounds it, to augment its facilities, for the spreading of its roots, and extending its branches, until, the growth of the latter becomes so great, that the birds of the air find shelter and repose among them. Even so, with the mind of man, it has properties and powers which are susceptible of enlargement; when these are cultivated in the path of duty, and lighted up by the spirit of the highest, things which might appear at one time to be impossible, is rendered obvious, plain, and easy to be accomplished.

The late news from the Valley, should not be the means of relaxing our energies in the discharge of our respective duties; but to the contrary, ought to serve as a fresh impetus, to renewed diligence and perseverance, in the performance of those things that the servants of the Most High, have treated upon in that document. As to the rich Saints of Pottawatamie, they are like angel's visits, few and far between; still we have no doubt but that some even here, and perhaps more in the Eastern States, have more means than they actually require; it is the duty of all such, to help their poor brethren who are desirous of removing to the Valley of the mountains next season; and we are of the opinion that they will not loose anything by the operation.

A Word of Warning to the Saints.

The spirit from the West, seems to whisper through various channels, that the period has arrived for the Saints to lay aside their speculative movements; and to turn their attention to things of greater value and importance.

The latest number of the Deseret News, contains a lengthy and appropriate article, over the signatures of several good men, whom we know well, and whose word should be esteemed by all who profess to be Saints. The tone and character of this document, should recommend the propriety of it, to every man and woman's conscience. The day has come, for the fulfilment of ancient prophecy, for the gathering together of the Saints, in order to be saved from the desolating scourges that await the wicked and ungodly.

The daystar glimmers, from yonder distant vallies of Ephraim to illume the path of the righteous, in the line of their duty; and like the polar Star, it is fixed, so that the mariner through time's tempestuous billows, may easily acquire a knowledge of his latitude and longitude; if he possesses the requisite qualifications, in connection with his chart, quadrant, and compass.

The time has come, that all those who have an outfit, or means to procure one, should leave for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake next Spring; others who have means, and property more than is actually necessary should help the poor out; not to Kanesville, and there leave them; but to the place appointed, as the hiding place from the storm, and a covert from the tempest abroad in the world. It is expedient that the Saints scattered throughout the States, and Canada, should use their utmost endeavors, by every laudable way, to remove as speedily as possible to the far West, in compliance with the spirit, and tenor of the last General Epistle of the Presidency there.

The eye of the Presidency of the Church, is not confined to the narrow limits of the Rocky Mountains alone, it extends to whatever place there is a Saint of God in a scattered condition on the face of the earth. The Savior said on a certain occasion: "Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem, &c., how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" How oft has the voice of our chief rulers in the West saluted the ears of the Saints with almost similar language. Will the Saints give heed to the voice of the spirit of truth? We hope they will, and escape the calamities in reserve for the wicked, and the unjust. The voice of the true shepherd says, come! shall we say stay? no verily; our voice to the Saints, is in unison with the spirit and tenor of the Epistle; also that of the document contained in the News, which our readers will find in another column of this paper. We would suggest to the scattered Saints who have enough of means at their command, to arise and put on the beautiful garments of duty, and tarry no longer in the States to amass riches, at the expense of the former's golden path; while treasures of a more enduring character are held in prospect, and a glory that will never fade away. Those who have not the means, if they continue faithful and persevering, in due time the day of their deliverance shall come also. Order and wisdom, should govern the Saints in all their actions, for the Church of God, requires everything to be done decently and in order.

We hope to see the Saints arise in the dignity of their character and calling, and esteem the riches of this world as a secondary consideration, in comparison to the duty they owe to themselves—their God, and their brethren; and while we are thus addressing others, we take the hint ourselves.

Past experience should prove, that it is unprofitable for us, to be slothful in the discharge of our sacred duties. Futhermore, if we as Saints miss the mark, the fault is our own. The same God rules on high, that once led Israel out of Egypt like a flock; and when there was no eye to pity them, nor a hand to help them; his own eye pitied, and his mighty arm brought their deliverance. Plague, pestilence, earthquakes, tornadoes, fire, blood, and vapor of smoke, are abroad in the earth; these, with many other omens, too clearly evince that the coming of the Son of Man is nigh at hand. "Come out of her my people, that ye may not be partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues." Is there any of the Saints so ignorant, as not to have felt the blighting influence of the atmosphere where Cholera prevails?

If it is hard for the Saints to escape; where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? The only bulwark of safety that a Saint has, is his faith and virtue, proceeding from a compliance with the ordinances of Heaven, and all the requirements of the Gospel of Peace; therefore, the Saint who has not the spirit of gathering, has not the spirit of Christ.

Wood! Wood!!

Who is going to supply Kanesville with good dry Cord Wood this Fall and Winter? We see a goodly number of idle men walking our streets, and complaining they cannot obtain employment. We believe wood will bring money this Fall. Who will engage in the enterprize? A hint to the wise is sufficient.

Returned Californians.

The following named gentlemen, left California on the 4th of May, and arrived at Austin, Fremont County, Iowa, on the 13th inst., all well and hearty. They brought with them, quite a considerable quantity of the shining Ore, as the fruits of their adventurous undertaking; we wish them much success, and the enjoyment of their hard earned treasures.

Jacob A. Markley, formerly from Wisconsin; John G. Carson, Illinois; N. L. Hane, Iowa; C. Vaughan, Rhode Island; J. B. Robinson, Rhode Island.

Health and Weather.

The citizens of this section of country, hitherto, have enjoyed unusual health; notwithstanding the severity of the Cholera in St. Joseph, and other towns below us, not a a single case ocurred this season in Pottawatamie County. The weather has been moderate—sometimes rather sultry. The crops look remarkably well, especially corn.

From the Deseret News.

The Saints of God should shun three things
Slander, tattling, and hypocrisy;
They're like the Upas Tree, which brings
Death and accompanying misery.

Three others they'd do well to own;
Truth, virtue, and integrity;
These, like the angels in their homes,
Bring joy, and peace, and harmony.

HOMER.

To the Saints,

Scattered abroad through the Eastern States.

BELOVED BRETHREN;—It is with the best of feelings and governed by the spirit of God, we have unitedly addressed you through the medium of the "Deseret News" and the "Frontier Guardian;" believing that it rests upon us as brethren in the common cause of Israel, to encourage you onward and to give you a little of our humble advice; which, if taken with the spirit given, will result in good.

In February, 1846, we seperated from you on the banks of the Mississippi River; our course was west, and your prayers followed us; you then wished to be with us.

Since that period, we have broken the slumbers of the wilderness, and made the "desert blosom as the rose." The plains where the wolf, the fox, and the grizzly bear roamed at will four years ago, have now become fenced cities; where health, peace, prosperity, and the spirit abound: we have been blessed by the God of our fathers, and now feel more determined to press forward in the great work than ever.

Innasmuch as it pleased God to fill our granaries with food for man and beast, and blessed the labors of our hands in all things, we ask you to arise as one man, and come and partake with us in the blessings which the Lord has heaped upon us.

Come to the fountain where truth flows from the lips of the prophet of God, and where true liberty only can be enjoyed by the saints.

We have made homes for our families, and farms to raise food; we ask you to come and partake with them, and assist in raising food for others as well as yourselves, and let us go to the nations of the earth to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ: for as elders of Israel, we feel the responsibility resting upon us, and the Lord requires it at our hands; and as long as you hold back our hands are tied.

It is beneath the spirit of God to grovel in the low things of this world, when they have enough and to spare to enable them to gather with their brethren.

It is the duty of the saints to come, and also to assist their brethren who are too poor to make an fit-out for themselves, and the Lord's blessing will rest on them that do so.

It is as much a duty binding on every saint to build up the vallies of the mountains, as it is to be baptized for the remission of their sins, or any other commandment given the servants of God to his people; and as fast as the Lord opens the way for individuals, and there is put into their hands a sufficiency to reach the valley, it is their duty to come and fear not; for the same God is at the helm now, as was when Joseph lived.

We were not afraid to trust our God when we launched into the trackless deserts, followed the trail of the pioneers, came and ploughed the land where the mountaineers said we could not raise a spear of wheat; and its altitude was so high above the level of the sea, as to warrant their assertion; but trusting in the God who fed the children of Israel in these the latter days, same as in days of old, with quails and manna in the wilderness, and knowing that he who is our prophet and leader is led by that same God, we had no fear, (for we had proven him in days gone by;) why then should you have any, when we have tried and proven it?

When the vallies are pouring their rich treasures into the laps of the saints; when the Lord has placed us in rich pastures, girt round by mountains capped with perpetual snow, where health abounds, and every blessing which ever was heaped on man is conferred, shall we neglect our duty; and because every luxury is accumulating around us, forget that we were brought here that we may forward the work! Shall we sleep and let the world not hear the glad sound of the gospel? No! we will arise and fulfill our part, for we have no excuse. God has placed us where we can find none.

Come then, brethren, to the valley of the mountains, that we may be enabled to go and magnify our calling as elders in Israel, for there rests on the shoulders of every faithful elder in the church the burthen of bearing the gospel to the nations of the earth; and for any man to sit down and content himself after he has made a comfortable home, &c., shows that he has not learned Mormonism as we have, and we know that if we do not go and preach the gospel when the way opens, that we are under condemnation.

Feeling an interest in your welfare, we wish to suggest that you cast politics to the dogs, for it is not any part of an elder's mission to dabble in such dirty work. We have tried politicians and politics of every grade, in days gone by, sufficient for us to know that they dont belong to us, for we have suffered sufficient in Missouri and Illinois to learn the maxim that "a burnt child dreads the fire."

Sell your farms and houses, and let Kanesville be in the hands of strangers, for you can do more here; let the cry be that a saint cannot be found, the cities are vacated, for God has work for his people, and do not permit the sons of strangers to come here and take up the lands of your inheritances, while you are trying to speculate out of them for a mess of pottage.

Shun the man who would counsel you not to come to this place as you would a rattlesnake; for the gathering of the saints is as true a doctrine now, as it was when the prophet Joseph lived; and when a man is possessed with the spirit which fill the bosom of our beloved president and all his brethren in this valley he will immediately make all the exertions he can, and will counsel others to come to this place, and he who has not the spirit of gathering "is not of us," and we say, avoid such, for they have not the spirit of God abiding in them.

Let speculation in farms, houses, &c., alone; your duty is to gather to the Salt Lake Valley, to prepare you to go and preach, and to release us, when we have filled our missions.

We wish to call your attention to the last general epistle of the Presidency, where it says, that "it is wisdom for the Saints to gather where they can do more good in one year, then they can in ten where they are, and if they hold on to farms, &c., for speculation, that they may expect to have to get help to come out,"—why? because when the Saints hearken not to counsel, they are scourged.

We look back, and remember brethren who were well off, and had health and strength to make a dozen outfits since we left, but alas! they are not amongst us; we hope that there will not be a man who once lived in Nauvoo, and has had five years already to make an outfit, but will have energy of character to fit himself, and some poorer family who have been sick or unfortunate.

We have made things comfortable, so that no man need suffer.

The road is easy for an industrious man to accumulate comforts around him; and we now wish to say that if there be any who can not leave the leeks and onions of Egypt, they had better forward their licenses to their respective quorums, so that those who make covenant with God by sacrifices, may reap the reward which is for the just steward, who put his talents to usury.

We conclude, praying God the eternal Father to bless you with his spirit, which will enlighten you in all things, and that we may see you next season by thousands flocking to this place bringing peace and joy in your bosoms, which we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

We subscribe ourselves your brethren in the everlasting covenant.

Another Destructive Fire in San Francisco--$3,000,000 worth of Property Destroyed.

NEW YORK, August 6.

The Empire City, from Chagres 25th ult., arrived this morning. She brings 300 passengers, $400,000 in gold dust on freight and $300,000 in the hands of passengers.

San Francisco was visited by another destructive fire on 22d June. The office of the Alta California newspaper was blown up, with the view of arresting the progress of the flames, but without avail—Everything was burned from Pacific to Washington street east, excepting two or three buildings near the corner of Jackson street. From Washington street the fire crossed over.

The new Theatre, which was consumed at the last fire, was again destroyed. The flames spread through to Merchant street, and then crossed to Clay street, on the north side below the Exchange; then it extended to the brick buildings on the north side occupied by Rolante & Wilde in Montgomery street. During the progress of the fire, large quantities of goods were removed to places where they ultimately took fire and were destroyed. Along Broadway everything was consumed as far as Kearney street. In Pacific street the fire consumed every thing in its course as far as Ohio street, including the City Hall and the City Hospital. On Jackson street everything was consumed. On Montgomery street, a few houses below on Stockton street. The fire extended as far as Washington sreet diagonally to the rear of the Baptist Church, which was consumed, and then it wended down Washington street and along Dupont street, taking the Jackson House in its course. Those sojourning in the City Hospital, to the number of 70, were removed to a lot in the rear of the Hospital, and were all saved. The Presbyterian Church on Stockton street was burned. Chas. S. Adams and McBlach, of the firm of Bach, Bassett & Co., were burned to death. The number of buildings destroyed is not less than 500. The loss is estimated at $3,000,000.

Capt. Snow, a worthy citizen of Sonora, was recently murdered. Two days afterwards two assassins, had been taken by the populace and no doubt were executed.

A row had occurred among the miners near Carson diggings, in which 2 Americans and 3 or 4 Mexicans were killed.

A party of 70 men under Capt. Fitzgerald had been cut off at Toad River.

During the night of the great fire Lewis Pollock was called out his bed, and on making his appearance, was shot dead by a man named Gallagher.

The accounts from the mines and placers are very encouraging. The prospect of good crops throughout the country is also very encouraging.

Our city is again growing very fast; 200 buildings have been erected during the past week.

A horrible murder has been perpetrated at Sonora. Some person who took offence at an article in the Sonora Herald, went to the room of one of the editors, dragged him out of bed and shot him through the head. They also killed two other persons connected with the office and wounded three others who went to the rescue.

Among the deaths in June, were Thomas Landsdowne of Chicago, on the 20th; R. K. Curry, of Wisconsin, on the 27th; Aaron Jones, aged 40, on the 29th; and Richard Gardiner, of Baltimore. The fire has completely unsettled the market. There is a fair demand for breadstuffs for the interior, but the supply is large.

From the New Orleans Delta.

Glorious News from Cuba.

The Revolution Commenced—First Battle on the Fourth of July!—Auspicious Day—The Patriots Triumphant—Thirty of the Troops of Tyranny killed in the First Conflict—The Patriots concentrating at an Impregnable Point—Enthusiasm of the Patriots—The Government Panic Stricken!

The Fourth of July having been agreed upon by the Cuban Patriots to strike for freedom and Independence, the men of Puerto Principe obtained the honor of commencing the struggle. At 3 o'clock in the morning of the Fourth, twenty young men, selected for that purpose, attacked one of the posts at the gates of the city, and took possession of it, hoisting the flag of Free Cuba over it. They remained in possession of the place only a very short time, as their orders were to retire as soon as they should have made some public demonstration, and given the cry of independence. When attacked by superior forces, they retired in good order and joined the main body of the patriot forces, consisting of 700 Cubans, and 300 Americans.

A similar movement was to take place at the other large cities, as soon as they should hear that the blow had been struck at Puerto Principe—We cannot now, from prudential motives mention these places, but we entertain the slightest doubt that they are in arms.

The two places mentioned in the dispatch to Cypher, are Puerto Principe and Tunnas.

Important from Rio Janeiro.

An American Steamer Blown up by an English Steam Frigate—An Explanation Demanded by our Minister—United States Ship Dale at Rio.

PHILADELPHIA, July 20.

The barque Minnesota arrived at this port to-day, bringing Rio Janeiro dates to the 11th of June. The commander of the British steamer Cormorant had seized the steam tow-boat Sarah, on suspicion of her having furnished supplies to vessels engaged in the slave trade, and towed her outside the harbor and blowed her up.

The United States sloop-of war Dale, last from La Plata, had arrived at Rio—all well.

RUSSIAN EXCLUSIVENESS.—A London correspondent writes: "No American can now go into Russia. The Russian Ambassador refuses to vise the passports of American travelers."

Indian Council at Fort Laramie.

Col. D. D. Mitchell, of St. Louis, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, has been authorized by the Government to treat with the Indians occupying the territory along the base of the Rocky Mountains, on the South side of the Missouri, as far South as the boundary of Texas. Col. Mitchell left St. Louis on Thursday last for Fort Laramie. Expresses have been sent out to invite all the tribes within the above boundary to be present, and it is thought that the Council will be held some time in the month of September.

With many of the tribes in this region, the United States have no treaty stipulations whatever, and it is deemed highly necessary for the protection of emigrants and trading trains across the plains, that our Government should come to some amicable and just understanding with them. A strong escort of troops will accompany Col. Mitchell and remain with him during the sitting of the Council.

That's right! we sincerely trust, that Col. Mitchell will enter into some arrangements with the Pawnee, Omaha, and Ottoe Indians. They are without exception the most degraded Indians on the plains—there is nothing too low, and mean for them to do. We venture to say in our own name, that if immediate effectual measures are not entered into by the superintendent, to keep these Indians at Bay; Uncle Sam's Territory in the West will not improve much, for years to come.

Fashion.

Additional news from the plains, has crowded out of this issue, our correspondent L's. remarks on the latest fashion—A LA CAPAPIE. It will appear in our next.

LEGAL ATTAINMENT.—A Judge in his Cups.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Recorder.

From the Deseret News, June 28.

Messrs. Holladay & Warner's advance train is expected daily; and Messrs. Livingston & Kinkead's very soon. (See their notice.) A few small trains of California emigrants have passed during the last two days, and it is rumored that A. W. Babbitt, Esq., and Dr. Bernhisel are near at hand.

We understand that Messrs. Phelps & Childs lost from 30 to 50 head of mules, from their herd about 20 miles south, about a week since, and that two of their herdsmen were missing, at the same time; Mr. Childs went in pursuit. Thursday morning, we hear that some of the animals taken from P. & C.'s herd have arrived in the city, having been exchanged with emigrants.

We hear that a portion of the cattle stolen from White's herd, have returned to Tooele settlement, on a stampede.

The weather has been warm the past fortnight; sky clear most of the time; no rain: the earth is getting very dry, and considerable grain is being damaged for want of irrigation.—[Deseret News.

Answer to Charade in our Last.

Sir:

Miss Jaley Ana M * * * * * e part guess'd your Charade,
For in your divisions, omissions she made.
She says that your word, first intended, is "Miss,"
Although you in spelling omit final S.
Your second word, "fortune," she says you place right,
Your whole is "misfortune," of ten letters bright.
4 names Geographical, rivers she choose,
Missouri, the Tennessee, Nesse, and the Moose.
4 numbers she says, are one, four, nine, and ten,
4 parts, nose, foot, toe, feet, of women or men.
4 terms in music, time, tone, tenor, tune,
7 planets she says, are the sun and the moon.
9 creatures or parts, are moose, mouse, nose, foot, feet,
But she lacks 4 others to make 9 complete.
11 names, mister, miss, misses and son,
Sis, sister, &c., with this she's not done.
With 14 productions, she fears to begin.
Although she knows many, yet all can't come in.
Now 5 forms of water, frost, mist, 3 excuse
For only pure water she want's all to use.
5 minerals she says, are tin, iron, and ore,
She here again falters for lack of two more.
Next "tire," she thinks may apply for a band,
And "sin" is an evil all over the land.
A "ton" is a great weight—a "store," is a place.
Now "Summer" comes next, and she's near won the race.
A compulsory tax, "Ruin," or despair,
If it is not ruin she's not guessed fair.
If we destroy "Union," 'tis sure a disgrace.
The doctors have found "fit," a troublesome thing,
Its cure in a minute they surely can't bring
Please Amicus to fill what's omitted engage,
For she has scarce reached 14 years of age.

OMISSIONS SUPPLIED BY W. W. M.

The 4 animals lacking, are perhaps, steer, roe, horse, otter, &c.
5 names of persons, Titus, Simon, Simeon, Moses, Orson.
14 vegetables, or products of, as, onion, rose, fir, osier, fern, mint, rue, rosin, resin, ointment, nut, root, moss, snuff.

POETRY.

From the Deseret News.

Impromptu to the Saints.

Awake! for the day is approaching—
The morning is beginning to dawn;
Arise, shake yourselves from the dust, and
Put the garments of righteousness on.

Avoid all appearance of evil— [pure,
With clean hands and with hearts that are
Lay hold on life's that's eternal,
And strive to the end to endure.

Hark! hark! the small voice of the spirit
Of Elohcim whispers around;
List! hark, for the pow'r of salvation
Breathes forth in its sweet gentle sound.

Seek not for the gold of the mountain,
But lay up a treasure above—
Hold fast to the strong "rod of iron,"
Drink deep from the fountain of love.

Seek not, like the wrath-smitten Uzzah,
To steady the ark of the Lord,
But with what your authorities counsel
Let judgment and feelings accord.

No fellowship hold with such sprits
As basely engender distrust;—
With a confidence firm and unshaken
Acknowledge the Priesthood is just.

Thus like clay in the hands of the potter,
The master can mould you at will—
He will fashion you vessels of honor,
Responsible stations to fill.

And the life-giving spirit of Jesus
In your bosoms will ever reside;
And from year unto year in your dwellings
Will peace and salvation abide. E. R. S.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Woman's Worth.

I saw a tender, graceful vine,
With fond affection clinging
Unto an oak, amongst whose leaves
The birds of heaven were singing,
The oak gave strength unto the vine;
The vine, with love and duty,
Repaid the oak its guardian care
With sweetness, grace and beauty.

A storm, with fierce and scattering blast,
Within the heavens gathered:
And when its mad turmoil had passed,
The oak lay low and withered:
Yet still the vine though crushed to earth,
Lay, sweetest odor breathing,
And even kept with beauteous worth
Around its ruins wreathing.

A man of firmest mind may oft,
Like that strong oak, be shattered,
And all his boasted strength of love
Unto the wild winds scattered:
But woman's love and woman's worth
No earthly thing can wither:
And when at last her Savior calls,
She takes her beauties thither.

MISCELLANY.

Anniversary of the Battle of Fort Moultrie, Secession from the Union, the Watchword, &c.

The 28th June, 1851, was celebrated by the Moultrie Guards with the spirit and enthusiasm characteristic of that corps. They assembled at 3 A. M before the Charleston Hotel, in large numbers, under the command of Captain Wayne, and were thence escorted by the Citadel Cadets through the principal streets of the city, halted on East Bay, their west wing resting on Market street—Here the flag of the Cadets was transferred for the day to the Moultrie Guards, Lieut. Cottrell, with the following remarks:—

I have been chosen by my fellow Cadets, to entrust to the keeping of the Moultrie Guards this day, the banner under which we usually parade; and it is presented, sir, with the full confidence that, whilst in your possession, it will occupy no position which would cause a blush to crimson the cheeks of any Carolinian. During your celebration this day, should any untoward circumstance occur, leading to a conflict with those who have refused permission to Carolinians to celebrate in the usual manner, the anniversary of that event, of which we have to boast, confident are we that each and every one of your company will prove that the spirit of '76 is not extinct. It may be that, ere long, the Palmetto flag will wave in larger folds than those, over the freemen of South Carolina, gathered from the mountains and from other sea shores, in a struggle to rid themselves from an oppressive and insulting government; and when that hour comes, we ask that the Moultrie Guards and Citadel Cadets may stand shoulder to shoulder.

To which Captain Wayne replied:—I receive from you this flag, with emotions which I am unable fully to express. An honor so distinguished may well overwhelm me with emotions to which language cannot give utterance. But, sir, though unable to express the feelings which proudly swell this bosom, I receive the precious charge, and shall maintain its honor and impurity sacred and inviolate. Beneath its ample folds and overshadowing protection, we will this day, and on the spot where our fathers fought and conquered, celebrate their triumphs, and catch the inspiration of men who lived for their country, and only their country.

The Moultrie Guards now left for Mount Pleasant, and after their usual target practice, joined the citizens on board the steamer Nina, and proceeded to Sullivans island On arriving, they, together with the citizens, assembled to celebrate the day, were escorted by the College Cadets to the pavilion erected near Fort Moultrie. After three hearty cheers for the Palmetto Flag, and three more for South Carolina, the procession entered the pavilion.

The meeting being duly organized, the venerable Jacob Bond I'on, presiding, prayer was offered by the Rev. J. B. Campbell, at the conclusion of which the chairman arose, and briefly stated to the meeting the circumstances under which they were assembled.

An address was then delivered by Thomas M. Hanckel, Esq., a member of the Moultrie Guards. The orator, in a few brief sentences, alluded to the scenes of the day they were assembled to celebrate, and, passing to the stirring topics of the present times, contrasted the humiliating and tributary condition of the Southern States, with the honorable position they then occupied as the equal and the welcome allies of their Northern Brethren. Dwelling for a moment upon the evils under which we suffered, he declared his belief that the only remedy was to be found in an inflexible determination to dissolve the Union—a determination "which would accept of no indemnity for the past, listen to no concessions for the present, and rely on no guarantee for the future; but which would ask and accept nothing but the sovereign right of self-government and Southern independence." That these evils were beyond the reach of any constitutional remedy, and lay in the essential antagonism of the two sections. That, in view of the duties we owed to the African race, our cause became elevated to the dignity of a high and sacred mission. That the right to discharge these duties formed one of the noblest and purest elements of civil liberty, and ought to be claimed above all rights. Mr. H. next considered the duty of the loyal citizens of the State at the present crisis. It was, he conceived, "to harmonize the sentiment and concentrate the action of South Carolina at all hazards—of the South if possible." And he entreated his fellow citizens, "in the name of all that was dear to our pride or sacred to the State, as there was but one sentiment or purpose, let there be but one great, undivided resistance party of South Carolina. That party was already organized, its convention already elected; and he was willing to confide the fortunes of the State to their wisdom, their honest convictions and upright purpose. The convention would assemble entirely uninstructed, and under circumstances most favorable for listening to argument and counsel. That, in the meantime, the subject should be discussed with frankness and forbearance. He concluded with a glowing appeal to all parties to sustain the action of the convention, and with staunch and steady ranks to close around the banner of their native State.

After the oration, the Moultrie Guards returned to dinner in the city, which was served up at the Pavilion Hotel, at half-past 5 P. M., and never were men in a better mood to do it ample justice. And although, by the rules of the company, maintained now for fifteen years, all exhilerating beverages were excluded, the highest spirit and enthusiasm prevailed.

SONG OF THE MOULTRIE GUARDS.

The war drums are beating, prepare for the fight;
The stern bigot Northman exults in his might;
Gird on your bright armor, your foemen are nigh,
And this be your watchword, "We conquer or die."

The trumpet is sounding from mountain to shore:
Your swords and your lances must slumber no more;
Fling forth to the sunlight your banners on high,
Inscribed with the watchword, "We conquer or die."

March on to the field, then, to do and to dare,
With shoulder to shoulder all danger to share;
And let your proud watchword ring up to the sky,
Till the blue arch re-echoes, "We conquer or die."

Pass forward undaunted, nor think of retreat,
The enemy's host on the threshold to meet;
Strike firm till the foemen before you shall fly,
Appalled by your watchword, "We conquer or die."

Go forth in the pathway our forefathers trod,
We too fight for freedom—our Captain is God;
Their blood in our veins, with their honors we vie—
Theirs too, was the watchword, "We conquer or die"

We strike for the South, mountain, valley and plain,
For the South we will conquer again and again;
Her day of salvation and triumph is nigh—
Ours, then, be the watchword, "We conquer or die."

6. Any person desiring his weights and measures inspected may apply to the county treasurer at his office whose duty it shall be to test them, and he may demand and receive therefor twenty-five cents for each weight and measure inspected, to the number of six, and fifteen cents each for all above that number, and he shall destroy all such weights and measures as cannot be made to conform to the standard.

YANKEE TRICK AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.—The Yankees have learned John Bull one trick at least in the Crystal Palace. The English have a Chub lock on exhibition, supposed to be unpickable, and has heretofore proved so to all English locksmiths and rogues. Mr. A. C. Hobbs, of New York, astonished the natives, by opening the chest in a few minutes with some sort of crooked Yankee nail he carries in his pocket.

The Yankees have given the ingenuity of John Bull a stamper. Mr. Herring, of New York, has put one of his plain counting room safes in the exhibition, over which is a sign thus—"This contains two hundred sovereigns. The key is at the U. S. Commissioner—at the service of any one, and the money shall be the reward of any one who opens it." Now these are regarded as queer doings. There the key hangs, and Mr. Herring has posted off to France, confident that his gold is in the only place where it will be perfectly secure.

The Pacific Railroad.

A private letter from a friend in London informs us that Mr. Asa Whitney's scheme for a Railroad to the Pacific, across the northern part of this continent, is attracting there the attention we had expected from its grandeur and feasability, and the singular clearness, enthusiasm and tact of its advocate. It has been submitted to Lord John Russel, Lord Stanley, Lord Monteagle, and other eminent men, who have listened with the greatest interest to Mr. Whitneys explanations, and have expressed their satisfaction at their novelty and practicality. At the same time he has had interviews with heavy capitalists who have proffered him all the means necessary for the prompt execution of the work, to be furnished him as soon as the lands are granted for the purpose. These gentlemen only wait Mr. Whitney's acceptance of their proposals to employ their influence—which is large and will prove efficacious—with the Government and the Hudson's Bay Company in order to secure the grant, which will be made substantially on the same terms as were contained in the bill lately before Congress.

We confess that we cannot see the prospect which these facts offer without a pang of regret that such a work should not be executed by the United States. Nor can we banish the hope that Mr. Whitney may not close with those proposals, attractive as they are, and that we may yet have the opportunity of building this magmificent highway of the world.

Still, if British America carries off the prize of glory and empire, we shall not repine at her fortune, for it would be achieved solely by conferring upon mankind at large benefits of untold extent and duration.

MILITARY ASYLUM.—Cincinnati has been selected by the Commissioners as a point for the location of one of the Military Asylums authorized by an act of the last Congress. The papers of Louisville and St. Louis, complain loudly of this decision, and say that the claims of their respective cities have been overlooked. When in Louisville, they made no examination, and did not even visit St. Louis at all.

In this country we own no sovereigns except the ladies—God bless them—and every man ought to have one.

California, Oregon and Salt Lake.

Proof—The first overland emigrants that arrrived at Sacramento, this season, made the trip in fifty-five days from Council Bluffs. It is the healthiest route. Some six hundred according to the best information we can obtain have died on that comparatively fatal route. Caused by the impurities of the water

Charges Against the Governor of Utah, Disproved and Withdrawn.

We copy from the Buffalo Courier an article in which it states its belief that the charges against "Governor Brigham Young, of Utah, are entirely without foundation in fact." The charge that the Administration was aware of the truth of the charges before his appointment of course falls to the ground by the admission of the paper which published and now retracts them.

We publish, moreover, the letter of Colonel Kane to the Pennsylvanian, which thus places our readers in possession of full materials upon the subject.

In regard to the publication of the message of the Mormons to President Polk, we have to say that it was a paper covered by the enclosure of Colonel Kane, and placed at our disposal. Its publication was indispensable to the defence of Governor Young, from the following charges:

"1. Of wholesale abuse of United States and our institutions.

"2. With leaguing with the Indians to harrass our people on the road to California.

"3. That this creature Young is an open abuser of Democracy."

Portions of the address were cited for that purpose. Nor was it supposed that the publication of a document addressed to the President of the United States could give any offence, especially when portions of the address were introduced and made use of, by quotations in the letter of Colonel Kane, to disprove charges against the authors of the address, and when the address contained the best evidences of the prompt and patriotic assistance of its authors to the flag of their country, their respect for its Constitution, and contradicts (inferentially) the charge that Governor Young was an open abuser of the Democracy.

Our prompt and satisfactory disproof of the charges against Governor Young has been the immediate means of bringing before the public new and interesting facts in relation to the Mormons, and of creating the liveliest feeling in their behalf, amongst those who were a few days since publishing charges of the most disgraceful conduct against them.

The result of this essay at vindication cannot but be gratifying to us. How far the fact that, so far from being "an abusive Whig," the Governor of the Mormons' "predilections, when in the States, were esteemed decidedly and soundly Democratic," may have had the effect of acquitting him of the heinous charges which we last week reported, is left to the public to determine.

Governor Young, of Utah.

Our article of July 2d on "Executive Appointments" has elicited a communication from a friend at the East, which presents the subject in a different light. We are assured that the charges brought against Governor Brigham Young, of Utah, are altogether without foundation in fact; and though a Mormon, and leader of Mormons, his character as a man is above reproach; that he proved himself a most hospitable any generous friend to the suffering California emigrants of 1849 and 1850; that Mr. Polk's administration had reason to value his patriotism and devotion to the interests of the Union; and last, not least, so far from being an abusive Whig, Mr. Young's political predilections when in the States were esteemed decidedly and soundly Democratic.

Our authority, which is that of a gentleman not long since returned from the Salt Lake, and whose business brought him into close communication with Mr. Young and some of his associates in the territorial Government there, is of so high a character that we are pleased to be able to make this statement. Indeed, we confess we have been touched by our informant's picture of Mr. Young's plain but generous and hearty life in his distant home among the mountains, and revolt at lending any countenance to assaults upon his hospitable fireside which do not spare the character of its mistress, whom friendly and hostile report alike asserts to be a truly discreet and lovely lady.

Our article was based on the information of facts stated by a writer in the Rochester Daily Advertiser, recently returned from Salt Lake, and whose character and ability, to make good his assertions, were vouched for by the Advertiser. We must commend the subject again to the notice of the Advertiser, and its informant or correspondent, being anxious to know the simple facts as they are, and not crediting the idea that they have sought or intended to misrepresent them.

From the Pennsylvanian.

An Interesting Statement -- The Mormons.

The subjoined letters amply explain themselves. We are glad to lay them before our readers, not only because we believe the Mormons to be a community which deserves respect for many qualities too often slighted in older and more popular denominations, but because in reference to the charges alleged against their Governor, Mr. Young, we know that the testimony of Colonel Thomas L. Kane, of this City, is entitled to the fullest credence. The statement in the Wash. Republic, to which allusion is made by Colonel Kane, seeks to make party capital out of this contradiction of the report against Governor Young, of Utah; an expedient that is not just to the facts, nor fair to Colonel Kane, who vindicates the Mormons, not as a partisan, but as their known, their eloquent, and their most disinterested friend. Certain it is that no Democratic journal would publish any slanders against Governor Young, knowing them to be such, or persist in them after they had been exploded and exposed. It is one of the fundamental articles of the Democratic faith to advocate the freest toleration in regard to every religious belief; and we are sure there is no general example in reference to the Mormons in which Democrats have ever departed from it. The experiment of the Mormons in the Great Salt Lake Valley, with their thirty thousand of population, their order, their discipline, their obedience to the laws, and their love of country, go far to disprove many of the aspertions of their foes, and indicate a future in the highest degree auspicious and gratifying. We are quite sure our readers will thank us for laying before them the following interesting and opportune statement of facts:

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1851.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PENNSYLVANIAN:

I have seen in the Washington Republic, of the 15th inst., certain passages under the editorial head from two letters of mine in reply to one which the President, Mr. Fillmore, had done me the honor to write me on the subject of the Mormons, and the officers of Utah, and, in an accompanying paragraph, a reference to me as having authorized the writer to make certain statements.

I have no acquaintance with the Editor of the Republic, and, so far as I know, have never communicated with him directly or indirectly on any subject. The absolute tenor of my letters will be apprehended more correctly by a publication of them in full, with that to which they form the reply. The address of the Mormons of the 9th August, 1846, which is included in the Republic's article, was communicated to Mr. Fillmore in my "personal" letter, as the paper that "I regret I have never been authorized to make use of." I cannot therefore now contribute to its publication. The rest of the correspondence, however obviously intended for more private use, I send you without change.

Your Obedient Servant,
THOMAS L. KANE.

WASHINGTON, July 4th, 1851.

MY DEAR SIR:

I have just cut the enclosed slip from the Buffalo Courier. It brings serious charges against Brigham Young, Governor of Utah, and falsely charges that I knew them to be true. You will recollect that I relied much upon you for the moral character and standing of Mr. Young. You knew him, and had known him in Utah. You are a Democrat, but I doubt not will truly state whether these charges against the moral character of Governor Young are true.

Please return the article with your letter.

Not recollecting your given name, I shall address this letter to you as the Son of Judge Kane.

I am, in great haste,
Truly Yours,
MILLARD FILLMORE.

MR. KANE, Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, July 11, 1851.

MY DEAR SIR:—I have no wish to evade the responsibility of having vouched for the character of Mr. Brigham Young, of Utah, and his fitness for the station he now occupies. I reiterate without reserve, the statement of his excellent capacity, energy, and integrity, which I made you prior to his appointment. I am willing to say I volunteered to communicate to you the facts by which I was convinced of his patriotism and devotion to the interests of the Union. I made no qualification when I assured you of his irreproachable moral character, because I was able to speak of this from my own intimate personal knowledge.

If any show or shadow of evidence can be adduced in support the charges of your annonymous assailant, the next mail from Utah shall bring you their complete and circumstantial refutation. Meanwhile I am ready to offer this assurance for publication in any form you care to indicate, and challenge contradiction from any respectable authority.

I am, Sir, with high respect and esteem, your most obedient servant.
THOMAS L. KANE.

THE PRESIDENT.

[Personal.]

PHILADELPHIA, July 11th, 1851.

MY DEAR SIR:

I trust the accompanying letter (folio) meets your views, and that I have not erred in supposing you to require of me, not an elaborate argument in vindication of Governor Young, and disproof of Mormon libels in general, but simply a repetition of my oral statement in responsible form and over my own signature. At least, you will not accuse me of being non-committal.

I find nothing new, however, in the Courier's charges against Governor Young, except that he "levied high and unjust taxes on men selling property at Salt Lake to aid them on their journey," which is so far true that the little municipal council of the Salt Lake City did—at its first organization, however, and before the United States or any other government had noticed its existence—enact that a tax should be levied on all sales of spirituous liquors within the City bounds. This tax must have been heavy too, for I think it was intended to be almost prohibitory, the Mormons as a sect favoring and enforcing temperance measures, and doing their best to prevent the sale of whisky to the savages around them. I have only to say, that if our emigrant citizens everywhere could be placed under such restraint, your War Department would hear much less of their suffering from Indian outrage.

The other accusations are a mere rehash of old libels, the most deserving of them only rough mythic embodiments of a vulgar notion of Mormon "facts" prevalent in certain regions of the western country. And, since the apotheosis of Joseph Smith, these seem to connect themselves with the name of Brigham Young, not only as the present head and front of Mormonism, but also as the known fleece-taking Jason of what, after all exaggeration is set aside, history has still to characterize as a truly remarkable and heroic expedition.

I can refer you to my friend, Judge Douglas, for the best account of the charges in Illinois against Mr. Young, which, I presume, may be taken to mean divers bills ignored by different grand juries in the circuit over which Judge D. presided, and which included Nauvoo and the Mormon precinct. I have equal pleasure in directing your attention to the fine refutation of the charge of "insult to the California emigrants," afforded by the cards of emigrant companies, published in various western newspapers, thanking the Mormons for hospitality and succor in distress. But you must permit me, in the matter of the remaining charges, to speak from my own knowledge, more diffusely, too, as upon one of them, at least; there is not probably now living any better witness than myself, and my failing health admonishes me it may be well to have my record in your memory.

I am not certain that I sent you a copy of a pamphlet I printed a year ago, to spread the truth about the Mormons, though I am clear that Dr. Bernhisel asked one of me for your inspection. With your permission, I will save your time by directing you to portions of it, upon pages 28, 29, 75, 77, and between 82 and 92.

My brief narrative (page 28, 29) of the enrolment and departure of the Mormon Battalion, was written with the express view of giving the lie to the charge against the Mormons of a want of patriotism and attachment to the Union. If, by chance, any allegation of this kind has reached your ears with the countenance of a name of weight, you will find the want of patriotism, and so forth, laid as of the time of the outbreak of the Mexican War, and previous to its decisive successes, and before the news had reached the Indian Territory of the settlement of our difficulties with Great Britain. At this very date, by my lecture, the Mormons are found, at a serious sacrifice of interest, despatching a Battalion of five hundred of their best men to conquer from Mexico the country, on a portion of which they are now settled.

It happens felicitously enough for the purpose of accusation before you that Brigham Young was the man of all others, whose influence carried through that measure with the Church. It was his American flag that was brought out to float over those hills for the first time; his drums beat; and his brave American speeches rang through the hearts of his people. I have given no name in my pamphlet, but it was he who said there: "You shall have your Battalion at once, if it has to be a class of our Elders." I regret that I have never been authorized to make use of the paper, a copy of which I enclose you, itself a copy of a letter to President Polk, written at a time of the severest trial. Its author, I believe, was the talented gentleman whose name was offered to you for the post of Secretary of the Territory, Dr. Richards; but it was signed by Brigham Young, and I know expresses the genuine feelings of his heart. I want you to remark, sir, that this, their first communication with our Government after their expulsion from their homes in Illinois, dates of August 9, 1846.

"The best Government on earth." "The Constitution of the United States most precious among nations." This is its language.

The remaining charge connects itself with that unmixed outrage, the spiritual wife story, which was fastened on the Mormons by a poor ribald scamp, whom, though the sole surviving brother and representative of their Jo. Smith, they were literally forced to excommunicate for his licentiousness, and who thereupon revenged himself by editing confessions and disclosures of savor to please the public that peruses works in yellow paper covers.

Young is a hard-working, conscientious, well-tried man, whose erotic inclinations may fitly match those of the Utah Church Patriarch, a venerable, octogenarian and long-respected Presbyterian elder, who also stands accused of the appetite for Eleusinian frolic. Young is fortunate in his family, too. I remember him wrapped up in his youngest child, an infant, whose health was suffering from the hardships of the march; and I recollect also that he had a son of the finest promise. Withal, he is so true a fellow, and has so much else to look after—being consulted by his people, as it seemed to me, upon nearly every emergency, from an Indian foray to a broken leg or a funeral—that I suspect he pays no manner of heed to any sort of abuse. His wife, however, who comes of a very respectable New England stock, charitable as St. Bridget, and proud of her husband as Queen Victoria, frets I am told—as pious women will do in such cases—over every fresh piece of nastiness, as if it were an awful and dignified message of Providential chastisement.

During a long attack of malignant fever, from which my constitution has not yet recovered, this lady showed me kindness I never can forget, and you must not wonder that my blood boils to think that upon her mainly recoil these brutal slanders.

I have headed this "Personal," rather that I might feel at ease in writing to you in haste, than for any better reason. You are at liberty, therefore, to make what use you please of its contents. I am not so minutely familiar with the affairs of Mormons since they have become so full of the cares of prosperity, and like as not are fast forgetting me and the little I was able to do for them. But my esteem for them continues unabated, and I shall have great pleasure in writing to the Salt Lake at once to obtain for you the exact history of the liquor tax, and what I had almost forgotten to notice, the something else about "Mr. Young's" apprehending men and trying them for supposed participation in the death of "Jo. Smith." Mr. Young's office among Mormons is that of President of the Church, and, since my knowledge begins, he has not officiated as Sheriff, Sheriff's officer, Judge, or Justice. I am, Sir,

Very respectfully and truly,
Your friend and servant,
THOMAS L. KANE.

MR FILLMORE.

Mystery.

This from the Latin word Mysterium, signifying a profound secret.

In a religious point; anything in the character and attributes of God, or in the economy of Divine Providence, which is not revealed to men.

In common acceptation; that which is beyond the comprehension of man until it is explained, a trade, a calling, any mechanical occupation which supposes skill or knowledge peculiar to those who carry it on.

Among the ancients a kind of secret religious worship to which none were admitted, but those who had inetiated.—[Webster.

We frequently are interrogated, relative to the mysteries of doctrines of Christ. Jesus said to his disciples, "the words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works sake. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do—because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it. If ye love me, keep my commandments, and I will pray the Father that he shall give you another comforter that he may abide with you forever."

Now there is a class that profess to understand all mysteries, and to have all knowledge, and to be deeply skilled in all the secrets, of the economy of Divine Providence, and they go about teaching Mysteries, revealing secrets, and speaking forth great swelling words of vanity; the devises of their own base and corrupt hearts; leading astray the thoughtless and unwary, and when they are headed by the authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, away they bolt, foaming and frothing like some venemous serpent, until the atmosphere around them is all impregnated with the poison that fills their own bosom. Their minds and spirits are benumbed, that they no more feel the warm and cheering rays of the spirit of truth; and then their whole aim is to gratify their own carnal lusts, and to satiate their brutal appetites; and to overthrow, and destroy the work of the Lord, by destroying the servants of God, or by weakening their influence among men. This was the course of William E. McLellin, and his associates in Missouri; and it has been the course of William Law, and his associates; of Sidney Rigdon, William Smith, J. J. Strang, Gladden Bishop, and the whole retinue of those who have apostatized from the Church; but their success, and the attendant results, I leave the Saints, and all honest people to judge.

An ancient Prophet said, "the secrets of the Lord are with the righteous:" again, he saith, "the Lord doeth no great thing, but he revealeth it to his servants the Prophets" Moses said, "if a man propheey, and his word come to pass, know that, that man is a true Prophet." The ancient Prophets declared, "that in the last days, a Prophet would the Lord God raise up of the seed of the House of Israel, that should set up an ensign, and to it the nations should seek for rest; and to it the House of Israel should be gathered, &c. That this Prophet should bring the record of the tribe of Joseph, through the lineage of Ephraim, and join it with the record of Judah; and that they should go forth to the gathering of all the House of Israel; and that it should be in the last days.

Those who have obeyed the Gospel of Christ with honest hearts, seeking the Kingdom of God, do know of a surety that the Father has in these the last days, made manifest his word, revealed the Book of Mormon, which is the record, or stick of Joseph, in the hand of Ephraim. Also that Joseph Smith Jr., did speak by the spirit of God; that he did propheey and his propheeies have been fulfilled, and are fulfilling; and that the everlasting Gospel is going forth among the nations, revealing those mysteries, that have been kept secret for hundreds of years. Therefore beware of any man or men that come to you bearing some fictitious name or title, borne by the Prophet Elijah, or some other great man in ancient days; and see that you are not seduced away from the truth, by any TAYLOR-izing, or BATE holding MAN; as that you want to know the secrets, remembering, they are with the righteous, and none but the wise shall understand, for the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand.

Prepare yourselves therefore and gather to Zion, according to the word of the Lord, and in due time, if you are faithful, you shall know and understand all things.

A friend to Zion,
EVERMONT.

Wonders on the Increase--Interesting from Paris.

Notwithstanding the warm weather and the absence from Paris of all the wealthier portion of the people, amusements and novelties are as numerous as ever. The principal attraction this summer, as it was last, is balloon sailing. Every Sunday an immense balloon goes up from the Hippodrome, and another from Camp de Mars, amid crowds of the most admiring spectators. Last Sunday, the one from the Hippodrome carried up three young girls—the daughters of the air, as they are called—attached to clouds which conceal the boat entirly. These young misses had the appearance of flying girls, as they were apparently separated entirely from the clouds—the wires which attached them being most ingeniously concealed. It was a frightful sight, to see three young girls suspended that way in the air and an immense balloon carrying them far and farther out of sight; of course, after they could no longer be seen, they were drawn into the car, where they changed their light gossamer costume for something more suited to such elevated regions.

At the same time, Mr. Poitevin, the most daring and most distinguished of the French æronauts, put the climax to all the feats he has yet performed, by ascending with his monster balloon from the Camp de Mars; in the following manner: Attached to the balloon, instead of the car, was a open barouche, drawn by two very spirited horses. At four o'clock precisely, Mr. Poitevin seated himself, with his wife by his side, and a lackey behind, took the reins in his hand, embraced his young son, and gave the signal: whereupon the hundred soldiers who held the immense machine down, let go, and away they went, horses, carriage, and occupants. For a long time, Mr. Poitevin, kept at speaking distance from the earth, but at last ascended out of sight. He decended about two hours afterwards, without the slightest inconvenience, upon a farm about five miles from Paris, where he was warmly received by an immense crowd, which had been watching him a long time. He says the horses behaved most admirably, and snorted, and seemed to enjoy the change of atmosphere as they went up higher.

A late Madrid paper brings us the news of a woman having, in a great measure, resolved the problem of flying, and has succeeded to a degree never yet known.

A Universal Moral Panacea.

The Yankee Blade proposes the following remedy for the ills of the flesh and spirit, composed of Leaves, Plants, and Roots, which, if taken without a wry face, will make any man respectable and happy.

Leave off Drinking.
Leave off Smoking.
Leave off Chewing.
Leave off Snuffing.
Leave off Swearing.
Leave the G'hals alone.
Plant your pleasures in the home circle.
Plant your business in some honorable employment.
Plant your faith in truth.
Root your habits in industry.
Root your feelings in benevolence.
Root your affections in God.

WOMAN'S CONVENTION.—At this assemblage in Akron (Pa.) some singular things were said, and some quite sensible ones. A young lady spoke as follows:—

"For her own part she loved man individually and collectively, better than woman, and so, she was sure, did every one of her sex, if they, like her would utter their real sentiments. She was more anxious for man's ellevation and improvement than for woman's, and so was every true woman.

SUPERSCRIPTION OF LETTERS.—In the directions to postmasters, in the Postal Guide, much stress is laid upon the superscription of letters. It must be correct. First. It must be legible, and that it ought to include the county, as well as the State to which the letter is directed. Packages of letters put up in one office for transmission to another should also be superscribed with the county of the latter office. A postmaster in Texas says, in that State the post offices are so little known, out of their immediate neighborhood, that letters not inscribed with the county are frequently sent, experimentally, from office to office, until they wear out, without reaching the office for which they are intended. A greater attention to these matters on the part of the writers of the letters, as well as postmasters, would much promote the comfort of postmasters and the facility and safety of the mails.—[Phil. Led.

The Charleston Courier contains a call for a public meeting of those citizens who are in favor of co-operation with other Southern States in the measures of resistance of what they consider the aggressions of the North, and opposed to what is styled the "seperate secessions" of South Carolina from the Union. This call is signed by a list of names filling two columns of the Courier in small type; and includes some of the most distinguished names of Charleston.

SOUTH CAROLINA SECESSION FLAG.—A mamoth white flag was suspended from one of the windows of the office of the Charleston Mercury on the 4th inst., on which appeared a lone star, and a rattlesnake with its head erect at the foot of a palmetto tree, as if about to strike. A portion of the military drew up before the office, presented arms, and gave nine cheers for the flag of South Carolina.—[Journal of Commerce.

The Saint Louis Intelligencer, and the Mormons.

The Intelligencer of the 7th ult., contains an article headed "About the Mormons," the greater part of which, purports to be extracts from a letter written by a gentleman in Carson Valley, East Sierra Nevada, en route for California, dated May 24th, 1851. Whoever may have read this slanderous production of disappointed ambition, may easily perceive the object of this gentleman, and the reasons why, these rich effusions of scandal, are poured forth to the world so profusely. If the public are ignorant of the circumstances connected with the affair, we consider it our duty to give them in detail, as they were told us in our office one month since, without solicitation or inquiry. Truth is mighty, and will prevail!

Mr. D. T. Nichols, a resident of Illinois, and a gentleman in every sence of the term, passed through this town last season, en route for the mines; this gentleman returned this season by way of Salt Lake; during his stay there, this modern would-be General, or Judge over affairs there, was cutting up his didoes at a great rate, and swearing eternal hostility towards the Mormons, unless they would succumb to his measures, and propositions in certain matters and things of law. Governor Young told him, that they knew the law there, as well as he did, and perhaps a little better; he became indignant at this; and to restore peace, Mr. Young told him, that he would give him an appointment, and pay him well for it, viz: to set Rat † † † † on end. The Judge felt rather dissatisfied, with his humiliating appointment; and declared in the presence of many witnesses, that he would bring the wrath, and indignation of the Government at Washington to bear upon the citizens of Utah, for that offence. Here then, is the fundamental cause of this outrageous letter, contained in the St. Louis Intelligencer, whose venom must be felt by every one that reads it.

Mr. Langley, and his associates, who arrived here on the 19th ult., from the West, confirm the statements of Mr. Nichols, relative to the course pursued by this would-be somebody without a name. We cannot say positively, that Judge Mc- • • • was the writer of the letter, because several others were with him; who, for stealing cattle, and committing other depredations in the Valley, were sentenced by a court of their own countrymen, to hard labor on the roads, &c.; but we are satisfied, that if he did not wield the pen, that the sentiments contained in that letter are his.

Will the Editor of the Intelligencer give us the name of the writer of that letter? We hold him responsible, until he does. This Mr. Somebody, or Nobody, is generally the only Body that finds most fault with the Mormons; and it is but seldom that we ever can find out, who that Body is. It is perhaps Ignis Fatuus, ie. Jack with a Lantern; which is certain to lead its deluded follower into some ditch or mire, and leave him there, to extricate himself the best way he can. The similarity in other respects, agree exactly also. Jack with his Globe of light holds out the strongest inducements imaginable for the traveler to follow him in a dark and dreary night; while Mr. Somebody, through Newspaper columns, has repeatedly tried very hard to effect the same kind of game, on the unthinking and unwary. Jack carries light! So does the Intelligencer!! We feel provoked at the foul, false, and malicious charges preferred against us as a people in that letter. We ask who would not? The Editor of the Intelligencer, would only be doing justice to the cause of humanity and truth, to devulge the name of that person whoever he is. We ask it in the name of humanity—we ask it in the name of American citizens—we ask it in the name of an injured, and misrepresented people. Should the Editor refuse, it shows that he is willing to endorse in the dark, that which he is not prepared to bring to light; fulfilling the scriptures where it says: "Ye love darkness rather than light, because your deeds are evil."

The Editor of that paper, is well aware that endorsing too freely, BAD PAPER, has brought men from the highest ranks and stations in life; to bankruptcy and disrepute. Futhermore, who knows but that the very Agent (the Press) employed by him, to crush the influence, and character of an industrious and innocent people, may become in time as a flaming sword against himself, guarding every way, but the road that leads to infamy and disgrace? Time and circumstances, will perhaps determine the sequel. We do not like to see, or hear of the misfortune of any man; neither should others, endeavor to abuse our character as a people, because we happen to believe in a doctrine a little different from what they do. If any man is authorized to abuse us, because he believes us to be false teachers; then, upon the same principle we are authorized to abuse every other teacher that differs with us; if such proceedings were carried on, where would be the end of strife; and who would not be the sufferer.

The first foul charge, brought by the writer of the letter in the Intelligencer is, the prohibition of free communication between the Valley, and the States. Who could know better than the Postmaster there? If the Postmaster had neglected his duty; hundreds and thousands of other persons, who did not belong to our Church, passed through that country for the last two years; they would be able, and no doubt would report if such a state of things existed there.

The following, extract we copy from his letter: "Truly, were an angel from heaven to tell you of the wicked practices and the base, unprovoked crimes of this people, you would discredit the report."

Well, did this infamous character know, that public credence would not be given to his false and malicious charges, when he penned them; because we are too well known as a people, by those who have at various times associated with us, in the capacity of a collected body in the States, and elsewhere. Our readers will find on our first page, sufficient evidence to refute the balance of charges brought against the people in the Valley, in the correspondence between the President of the United States, and our respected friend Colonel Thomas L. Kane, of Philadelphia.

Our friends, the Editors of the St. Louis Organ and Reveille, will please accept our thanks, for the following editorial article, which appeared in their paper of the 10th ult.:

The Mormons.

"We publish to-day a card from Messrs. Wrigley & Cain, the former, Presiding Elder of the Mormon Church in St. Louis, in present answer to a letter which appeared in the Intelligencer of Thursday, purporting to be from Salt Lake, and attacking in a very wholesale manner, the civil and religious character of the Government there, and the private characters of Governor Brigham Young, and every man and woman in the community. We read the letter with a great deal of surprise, not being at all prepared for such a stream of denunciation, from our knowledge of the Mormon Church and its congregation here; and although our views differ as widely as may be from theirs, we were shocked for the moment that our good opinion had been so abused. The charges, however, appear so extremely flagrant, and so widely differing from previous accounts received from men of sound judgment and facilities for estimating correctly, that we cannot but think the writer has misconstrued the character of the people and the leaders, or perhaps, under some little pique of the moment, has committed to paper, what in his calmer, more discreet mood, his better judgment would have left undone."

Calumnies Against the Saints.

We clip the following extract from the St. Louis Union of the 19th ult.:

We find in the Oregon Spectator of June 12th, the following statement from the pen of a Rev. Mr. Goodal, who has arrived in Oregon at the head of a party of emigrants from the States. They were forced to winter among the Mormons, whose morality and patriotism he pretends with impious and sacrilegious presumption to impeach. We call the attention of Brother Hyde to this matter, and solicit from him a clearing up of the whole case.

We learn from the same source, that notwithstanding the prevalence of the alleged peccadilloes among the brethren, they continued animated with an all-conquoring zeal for proselytism, and are about to send missionaries to South America, Oregon and California.

Friend Phillips seems very anxious that Brother Hyde should clear up the wholesale abuse made upon the citizens of the Valley, by the Rev. Mr. Goodal, of Oregon.

That's right Mr. P., if all the editors in your City, would adopt the same method, it would be more to their own credit, and less injurious to the character of that class of people ironically called Mormons. We are not all surprised that Priests, Reverends, Lawyers, &c., are up in arms against Mormonism;—it carries with it the broad axe of truth and peace; when these come in contact with the pocket interest of a goodly number of the clergy, &c., it makes them mad. Shall their madness destroy the work of the Great Eloheim who sits enthroned in yonder heavens, and looks upon men, comparatively in power as Grasshoppers? He, who could say to the raging billows of the mighty Ocean—Peace, be still; and a great calm ensued; holds the reins of the destinies of all men in his hands, and can turn them at his will, as he does the rivers of waters. This modern divine no doubt thinks, that he has been doing God's service, by slandering the character of the Mormons. Meanwhile he is doing them good, by bringing them from seclusion, to notoriety before the world; and though his representation of matters and things there, is not of the most pleasing character; yet, it is opening a door for every candid enquirer to investigate, and satisfy himself as to the truth, or falsity of his glaring statements.

Elder Hyde, will soon be here from the Valley, and we have no doubt, but that he will be able to give the precise particulars, relative to Mr. Goodal's charges, and every other Somebody's, that have made themselves officious in publishing to the world, what we are confident is false in the main. We have been associated with the Mormons for the last twelve years; and our sole reason for adhereing to their faith, is simply, because we consider it to be the most pure extant. The charges preferred by Mr. G., are so very flagrant, and their character at sight, so preposterous, and so contrary to previous reports received from the good, and orderly portion of other denominations who had visited the Valley, and had every facility of knowing, that we think every man and woman, having a grain of common sense left, can see that his accusations, arise more from a vindictive hatred toward Mormonism, than from the injury sustained by him while living there.

The facts relative to the grievances, existing between Mr. Goodal, and the people in the Valley, we are not in possession of; but shall be, just as soon as the regular course of mail may bring them; then we shall lay them before our readers, for their scrutiny and satisfaction.

B. R. Pegram & Co., of the St. Louis Store, Main Street, is selling off goods at cost.

Mails.

We take pleasure in noticing the punctuality of Messrs. Frink, & Co's, mail line of passengers coaches from Savannah to this place. Hitherto we do not think that they have varied half an hour from their regular time of arrival, and departure. Praise is due the contractors, and especially to Mr. Anderson, their driver. Mr. A. is a sober, punctual, and accommodating young man, and through his course of uprightness and civility, he reflects no small degree of credit on the contractors of the line. He has the good will, and best wishes of the citizens of this place, for his good and gentlemanly behavior.

The Des Moines Mail, arrives here not quite so regular as the other; it comes sometimes on Friday, and at other times it is Saturday before it arrives.

Later from the St. Louis Republican.

The Republican of the 9th ult., contains the following card from two of our respected friends in St. Louis. The contents clearly show, that the writer of the letter referred to in that card, is not the only one to blame for its appearance in print. Others equally anxious to find some charge against the Saints in the Valley, for reasons best known to themselves; seem to relish its contents so remarkably well, that they will not even give the name of their correspondent, for fear the divulging of said name should deprive them hereafter from receiving additional supply of a similar kind of food.

This is only a repetition of certain games of olden times. We understand it!

For the Republican.

Messrs. Editors:—By giving the following card a place in your columns, you will confer a favor upon the undersigned, and do but common justice to a much abused people:

A Card--To the Public.

In the Intelligencer of Thursday morning, an article appeared headed "About the Mormons," which purports to be extracts from a letter written by a highly respectable gentleman. It is unnecessary to say, that the article is highly insulting to the feelings of every Mormon, and calculated to prejudice the community against them as a People.

Feeling it to be our privilege to know who the accuser of our brethren was, we called upon the proprietor and editor of the Intelligencer, and told them we felt aggrieved by the publication of said article, and respectfully asked the name of the writer of the letter. They replied, that they "were not at liberty to give the name at present, as the letter was not sent to them, but to some gentleman of our City, whom it would be necessary to consult before taking such a step." They, however, gave us reason to believe that the name would be forthcoming.

All we ask, therefore, of the public, is to withhold their opinions until the name is obtained, and the accused parties have a chance to defend themselves; and we doubt not but they will be able to show the cause which produced the effect.

We regret very much that respectable papers should publish such accusations without publishing the accusers' names also. If they are "gentlemen," and speak the truth, they need not be afraid to give their names to the public. We believe in giving the Devil his due.

Yours, Respectfully,
THOMAS WRIGLEY,
JOHN T. CAINE.

Col. Chambers, of the Republican, and Col. Mitchell, Superintendant of Indian Affairs.

A correspondent at Fort Kearney, O. R., writes under date of the 18th ult., stating that the above named gentlemen, in connection with Inspector General Cooper, U. S. A. Major Chilton, with company B., first dragoons, as escort to the above; left the Fort at that date, to meet the Prairie tribes of Indians, in Council at Fort Laramie.

He also states that Col. Mitchell, was to try to persuade the Indians to come to Ash Hollow, to hold the treaty there; as it would be late, before the wagons could get up with the goods, as presents for the treaty.

Col. R. Campbell, and party were to leave on the 20th. Kendall, of the New Orleans Picayune, and company; also Lord Fitzwilliam, and his company, were behind several days.

Report says: that the Pawnees will decline the invitation to attend the treaty — the interpreter was then absent to try to prevail upon them to be there; but it was thought that his solicitation would prove a failure.

The health at the Fort, is said to be remarkably good.

From the Plains.

On Sunday, the 24th ult., two men and a boy, arrived in this town from Oregon. These gentlemen represent the emigration to Oregon, California, and Salt Lake, getting along very well. They met Elder Hyde, Judge Brocchus, and company on the 7th, three hundred miles this side of the Valley, enjoying good health and spirits. The other companies of Saints, who left here this season, were in succession behind, prosecuting their journey with reasonable speed. The grass on the plains is represented to be good, except in some place where camps had previously been; in those places it was rather scarce.

For the Frontier Guardian.

What an impertinent creature a Fly is; you strike it from your Ear five times, and it will again meet you in the Face.

J. J. Strang, who was excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, by a Council of High Priests and Elders of said Church, for proclaiming false doctrines, instead of repairing to Nauvoo to make restitution, and to be corrected in doctrine by those who were legally appointed, to proclaim doctrine, or to investigate, and correct principle; suffered his name to be published in the "Times and Seasons," as excommunicated, and went about to set himself up, and from time to time has sent his missionaries to try to convert the Saints, and has at all times met that just reception, the only regard that should be paid them, "To let them Alone." The Saints generally are well acquainted with the character and spirit of the most of those who step forth, and present themselves as Leaders, and Missionaries in such causes; that for a want of humility, of honesty and virtue, they were not willing to submit to those whom God had appointed; and therefore, were either, members that were cut off, or that went away disaffected, and rotten at heart. EVAN M. GREENE.

Unthoughted.

The young man who came into the Republican office on last Tuesday evening and carried off a copy of our paper, in advance of the publication day, committed what Printers regard as a dishonorable act. And by carrying it to our neighbors over the way, for their advance strictures, he increased its offensive character. A simple hint to a sensible man is always sufficient.

TIMELY!

Wonder if some of our friends in Kanesville, won't take the hint also.

Something New on the Frontier.

Mr. Sauntasea, Interpreter for the Omaha Indians, paid us a visit on the first inst., and stated that the Ottoes had delivered to him, several horses which they stole from emigrants, and citizens of this place previous to their departure on their summer hunt. Mr. S. said that Mr. Brown's were among the number; also Mr. Bushes', and one of Orson Pratt's; the other horse belonging to Mr. P. was taken by the Iowas, but the Interpreter entertained hopes of its recovery soon. This is a new era of things on this Frontier; it is but seldom that the Indian feels remorse of conscience; and as in this case, show signs of true repentance by making restitution to the parties injured, without compulsion. We have not the least doubt, but that the present negotiation entered into by the Government, with the Indians on the plains westward, may have an effect upon them, alike favorable to the citizens of the Frontier, and emigrants who may have to cross the plains for Salt Lake, California, and Oregon next season.

Should such a change be effected by the treaty at Fort Laramie, this season, hundreds, and thousands of emigrants will be wending their way next Spring, to the Land of Gold, and the rich Valleys dispersed among the western mountains.

The repeated losses sustained by emigrants on the plains, for the last three or four years by Indians, seemed to us, would materially effect detrimentally the future growth and prosperity of those remote regions on the quiet shores of the Pacific. Government having taken the matter in hand, we trust that hereafter, we shall not have any occasion to chronicle similar distressing circumstances, as became our duty to do this season and last.

Horses Recovered from the Indians.

Query! Who pockets the money paid by citizens of this place, to Mr. O'Neil, of Platteville, as redemption fund, for the recovery of the horses stolen by the Indians? Mr. Sauntasea, Interpreter for the Omahas, said in our Office on the first inst., that the horses could be obtained without fee, or reward.

Justice to the public, demand that this matter should be clearly understood. Will Mr. O'Neil make this transaction plain, by giving publicity to it through the columns of some Western Journal, so that the people in general may know the truth of the whole affair. At present the matter is shrouded in ambiguity. Mr. O'Neil, show yourself a whit man if you can! If not, recline into the shade, behind a B——l of W——y.

Is it not enough for the people here, to have their horses worn down to perfect skeletons by Indians, without imposing the enormous tax of from five to ten dollars a head, for their delivery. We say the man who pockets the money cannot prosper, whoever he is.

Where Can His Equal be Found?

We have been informed, that there is a certain gentleman in this town suffering severely from a chronic disease of the mouth; whether his disease came epidemically, or its origin is of long standing, we are unable to say; however, we think the Physician who attends to his case daily, should, before this time be able to report favorably. This miserable object of speculation, claims sympathy from every stranger that comes to town. Why cannot the medical faculty cure him? Is his case hopeless?

Correspondence.

In one of our columns this issue, our readers will find Correspondent L's., remarks on the latest habiliments in vogue in Kanesville. She snarls at the gentlemen, and finds fault with a certain class of Ladies. Wonder if it is not some old maid that wants to get married soon. Who would have such a creature? We should like to see the gentleman who would give her his hand.

For the Guardian.

The New Fashions.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to trespass upon your patience once more, as it is proverbial of one of my sex, to have the last word in almost everything, at least so it is said. And supposing that all females are endowed with certain inalienable rights such as holding their "Women's Right's Conventions," and endeavoring if possible to bring the "usurper" man, into a sphere of equality, and to wear whatever dresses they please, even if it were to adopt a "Bloomer," or what I consider a prettier name a "Camilla," whose business is it? I would really like to know. Some editors take it upon themselve to see what they can say to oppose this beautiful costume, with the advice of a few "old maids," who would never change their minds if they knew it would be the means of getting them a ——.

With the few preliminaries above, I will enter upon what I have to say. I saw with my own eyes a beautiful "Camilla," in our streets. and supposing that some of your readers would like a description, I will here give it: The "a la Turk," wore a neat hat, trimmed with red, with a splendid wrought veil, white dress, reaching just below the knee, turkish pants, with morocco slips—upon the whole she was attired most graceful. Now, what editor, lady, or gentleman can take any exception to such a beautiful costume? I would almost venture to say scarce none with the exception of some staid person, continually fretting about every thing that is new.

The new fashion which recently appeared in our streets, worn by the gentlemen, (or would be "usurpers,") was one not altogther to my fancy. The wearers not feeling at home in the "Capapie," they appeared somewhat awkward. Their coats in the first place were two or three inches too long, their pants were entirely of the wrong color, which should have been a light blue, instead of red, and were too tight above the knee, their caps answered every purpose, and their shoes were too high to make a neat appearance; but upon the whole made a very fair show. Suggesting these few improvements, I will close, fearing that I have already trespassed too long upon your good nature, and expect ere long to see the "Camilla," and "a la Capapie," to become the prevailing costume, in spite of the opposition of "old Maids, and "old Bachelors" combined. Yours truly, L.

Mr. Editor: Finding that my communication did not appear in your last, I desire to make a small addition. When returning from Church last Sabbath, during the shower, I could not help but seeing and experiencing the great inconvenience, of wearing what I cannot call by any better name than "draggle-tails;" they were all besmeared with mud and wet half way to the knee. And from this time I have made up my mind never to appear in the streets, in such a "toggery." In conclusion, Mr. Editor, I am resolved—regardless of the frowns or sneers of any. L.

Papers to Rocheport.

We now send one hundred and forty-one copies of the Statesman to the Rocheport Post office. With such a circulation as ours advertising in our paper is worth talking about.

That's right friend Statesman! Hoist your colors, and nail them fast!! But what would you think of the Guardian? Its circulation in St. Louis alone, is about three hundred and fifty; in Pottawatamie, over five hundred;—we send to Salt Lake and California, over one hundred and fifty copies; and besides these, it has a good circulation in almost every State in the Union, Nova Scotia, Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Prince Edward's Island, England, Scotland, Wales, Isle of Man, France, and in several other places on the Continent of Europe, too numerous to mention. With such a circulation as ours, we think our paper should attract more attention, than even the Statesman; although it is said to be a very good paper.

Who Likes It? We Do Not!

When we see men that have had their property stolen, rave and tear about, and threaten the thief or thieves, with all the awful denunciations of the Law; and then, when it is within their reach, to have a full and fair investigation and to have the offenders brought to justice, and thus magnify the Law and make it honorable: and then to see them (they having obtained their property,) sell themselves, or their honor, for a few paltry dimes, and letting the offenders go unpunished, and unhandled; thus allowing the whole stigma of such doings to be thrown falsely upon this people. We say, whoever likes it: We do not!. Do they realize the amount that bought them, will cost this community five dollars for one; it surely will, and we say in the name of Israel's God, let those who are the guilty ones be the loosers, and let them feel the necessity of refraining their hands from the holding of bribes and their ears from the hearing of evil. It is not enough to bear the numerous epithets that are thrown falsely upon this people, from those without the Church; but some of those who have a standing in the Church, and some too, who have been elected to honorable callings under the laws of Iowa, have grossly trampled upon the rights and feelings of this community, and broken the oath they took, when they swore to support those laws, and have now shown that a few dimes will buy their honor, and control their favor; and we would suggest to the citizens of Pottawatamie County that they beware to whom they confer favors, and in whom they repose responsibilities that may effect materially the destinies of this Frontier Country. A few more instances of the kind, and you have among you, horse thieves, ox thieves, and cow thieves abundantly, and already they begin to appear, in the various forms of claim hunters, horse racers, gamblers, thimble rigs, &c. To such we will say, they are, and will be known; and there are those who have a watchful eye upon them, and as a community, we have no use for them. Although we are desirous of selling our claims, and improvements, we do not intend to open a door for that class upon these frontiers. We do not want them in our midst.

At Oregon, Holt County, Missouri, August 3d, 1851, Mr. THOMAS EDWARDS, of Kanesville, Iowa, late from South Wales.

The deceased was one of the unfortunate inmates of the Bar Room, of F. A. Pollock, that was destroyed by lightning, on the night of the 17th July, as stated by Mr. Jackson's letter. He was at the time of the calamity, a day laborer for Mr. Pollock, employed in mowing and saving Hay, and was consequently sitting in the Bar Room at the time the barrels were burst, and the room filled with burning liquor, which has proven the death of seven of the eight men that were present.

There is no evidence to prove, nor any reason to believe that the deceased had been drinking, or playing cards, or engaged in any unhallowed practice during the day or evening, or even while he was in our County; but after he escaped from the room, his burning fragments of cloths were torn off him, his wounds immediately dressed, and from that time until his death, the citizens generally spared no money or pains, that they thought would alleviate his sufferings, and restore his health.

The praiseworthy conduct of Sheriff Beeler, Dr's. G. B. Thorp and A. S. Holladay, deserves particular mention, notwithstanding the deceased was a foreigner, a stranger, a poor man, and a Mormon; these gentlemen provided a room, and hired two brethren to attend to him, and nurse him day and night—furnished board for the nurses, and diet for the sufferer, and dressed his sores once and twice a day as long as he lived, and when he died they furnished him a good coffin and burial clothes, and saw that he was decently buried, at their own expense.

The deceased bore his afflictions and sufferings with almost unexampled fortitude, and patience, and died in the full assurance of a resurrection with the just, and an exaltation in the Kingdom of our Father: he died very willingly, and he even expressed himself anxious to die for five or six days, before the messenger came to his relief. The deceased had ten dollars and forty cents in his pocket at the time of the calamity, which was used to help defray the expences of his sickness. And the County Court at its late session, refunded the gentlemen above named, their money, and paid all bills presented, growing out of the late disaster, out of the County Treasury.

The deceased said he had two cousins, living at, or near Kanesville, and he wished them informed of his death, and burial; it is to gratify this his last, and very reasonable request, and to try to do justice to, or say a word in behalf of the citizens of this place for their magnanimity and kindness to a stranger, that I make this communication.

Very Respectfully Yours,
In the Covenant of Peace,
S. J. COMFORT.

Arrival of the Steamship Cherokee.

The steamer Cherokee, Henry Windle, master, arrived yesterday from Havana. She left Havana August 2, 3 P. M., with passengers and the California mails.

We are indebted to her polite Purser, Mr. Boyle, for her list of freight and passengers.

In addition to the information furnished by our own correspondent, we find in the evening papers of yesterday, matter of Interest. We subjoin a translation of important documents, for which we are indebted to the Picayune.

First, however, we give the following, which the Delta claims to have received from a reliable source:

On the 4th, they pronounced, in the "partidas" of Gualmoro and Gibanica, with the small number of 250 patriots.

On the 5th, in concert with another party from Holquin, they marched upon Tunas; but in the night one party mistook the other, and a melee took place, in which five were killed in the obstinate battle and twenty-eight wounded, before they discovered their sad error. Nevertheless they, as soon as they saw it, combined, and set upon the company of the Zaragoza Regiment in its barracks, and, after a short resistance, in which, there were a few wounded the Spanish troops joined them with the cry of "Liberty!" The Governor implored their lenity, and they left him at liberty, only taking from him his horse, sabre, pistols, and one thousand dollars of the Government money. They then marched upon the partida of San Juan de Santa Cruz, and on the 8th they found themselves in Coscorra, with 380 cavalry and 200 infantry.

The 8th and 9th were passed in the organization of four parties under the command of those patriots who had distinguished themselves the most at Las Tunas.

On the 11th, three of these set out—the other remaining in the mountains. That commanded by Don Serafin Reira advanced towards Santa Cruz, and shortly before reaching the river Najara he was informed that four companies of the regiment of Cantabria, commanded by Colonel Conti, were marching in the same direction, but as the river was swollen they were occupied in making a raft, in order to pass over it. The patriots allowed the Colonel and first company to pass, and when the second was on the raft they fell upon them and threw them into complete confusion. The result was, they took Colonel Conti, six officers, and fifty-six men prisoners; they saw thirty-six dead, without counting the wounded; they captured several materials of war and guns. In this most brilliant affair the patriots only lost one man and ten wounded.

On the 10th and 11th the other parties had various other skirmishes with the Government troops, both of cavalry and infantry, form Puerto Principe. On the 12th they were joined at Guamarina by a section of artillery under the command of Don Gabriel Fortun, consisting of sixty men and four obuses. The 14th and 15th, they remained still, recruiting forces—but on the 17th, Divine Providence pleased that the plains of Cuba, should witness more acts of heroism. The party commanded by Don Augustin de Aguero Y Aguero—three companies of the regiment of Ysabel II, and 80 lancers of the Squadron of Brurbon, were completely defeated, and of the 80 lancers only 10 remained and those badly wounded. On the 18th and 19th nothing of note took place, the ranks of the Patriots filling fast, on the 20th all the parties joined, and marched towards the mountains, interrupted by three companies of the regiment of Cantabria, who were beaten, and driven off, and on the 21st these heights were occupied by 2000 Patriots, 630 cavalry and 4 pieces of artillery, with the necessaries of war, and maintenance sufficient for two months, only waiting the movement of Trinidad, to descend into the plains.

San Antonia Cascero, 22d July, 1851.

Exciting News.

New York, August, 21, 4 P. M.

The steamer Cherokee arrived about 3 o'clock this evening, in four days from Havana; she brings San Francisco dates to the 15th July, and $2,640,630 on freight, and $165,000 in the hands of passengers, of whom she has two hundred. She also brings the California mails. She passed the Empire city going into Havana.

The accounts from Havana are of the the most serious character. We are indebted to the purser of the Cherokee for the for the following fearful narrative:

The frigate Hebe, while cruizing of a place called Bahia Honda, 40 miles west of Havana, captured a party of fifty patriots who were in boats unarmed; report says they were steering for New Orleans, they were brought into Havana by the frigate on Saturday morning, the 16th inst., and were shot about 11 o'clock the same morning on the public Road to Havana, in the presence of 2,000 spectators. Their corpse were then dragged along the streets by negroes, and then left to the mob, who commenced stripping them of their clothes and carrying them on sticks through the city, yelling like fiends.

It appears that the patriots were Americans, and many of the passengers of the Cherokee, who were on the spot, witnessed the execution and were insulted in the streets in a shameful manner and reminded them, that they being Americans, were all of the party who would share the same fate one of these days. Such was the excited state of the populace, that it was dangerous for Americans to be on the streets after night.

The following are the names of those executed: Col. W. Clendenin, Capt. F. S. Service, Capt. Victor Reno, Capt. T. B. Veney, Lieuts. James Brant, J. O. Norice, T. C. James, Dr. Jno. Fisher, Dr. R. H. Torquitt, Sergeants J. Whittaker, and A. M. Caliphet, Adju't R. S. Stanford. Privates, M. House, S. Mills, Edw. Rullum, S. L. Arnold, R. J. Weigh, Winseman Anselm, O. Travis, Pat. Billon, Terry, Samuel Reed, H. L. Arnel, Philips, J. L. Manville, S. N. Green, J. Cullerman, Napolean Collins, D. D. Wisher, Wm. Childing, T. A. Jones, M. J. Hall, J. Barit, Robt. Caldwell, W. Smith, A. Ross, B. Rourke, John Christad, W. B. Tittle, Robert Connor, Robert Critley, J. S. Sanks, James Stanton, Thomas Harnst, Alex. Allen, John J. Tabbs, J. Ellis, W. Hogan, and C. Robinson.

The steamer Falcon on her way up the coast of Cuba, from Chagres, was fired at thirteen times by the steamer Havana, and was obliged to heave to, when she was boarded by Spanish officers. This is the third time the Falcon has been served in this manner.

We learn from the passengers of the Falcon, that on the morning of the 16th, off Bahia Honda, the Falcon discovered a large steam frigate in chase, standing directly across her bow, but she kept her course and left the frigate eight or ten miles astern; she proved to be the "Isabella la Catolica," formerly the Cunard steamer Caledonia. While she was still in chase, another steamer hove in sight, which also gave chase, and succeeded in heading off the Falcon, and at first tired two guns to leeward, of which she took no notice; she then ran alongside and fired a third gun across her bows, though she had American colors flying. The chase then ordered the Falcon to heave to, which was done, when the officers boarded her.

Two Weeks Later from California.

Via the Nicaragua Route.

More Lynch Law.—The steamship Prometheus, Capt Henry Churchill, arrived on Wednesday at 4 A. M., from San Juan de Nicaragua, with 360 passengers and $600,000 in gold dust, and merchandze, to D. B. Allen.

The Prometheus left San Juan on Monday, 4th inst., at 11 o'clock A. M., and arrived at Quarantine, Staten Island, on Tuesday, 12th, at 11 a'closk P. M. passage 8 days and 12 hours, bringing her passengers from the steamer Pacific, which left San Francisco on the the 14th ult., and arrived at San Juan del Sud on the 29th ult., with 425 passengers and $800,000 in gold dust.

The passengers came across the Nicaragua route 15 miles by land carriage, thence took the steamer direct across Lake Nicaragua, then the new iron steamer Sir Henry L. Bulwer, down the San Juan river to the Prometheus, in 32 hours runing time for the first trip. They all expressed themselves very much pleased with the route, and say that the country is delightful. All in good health.

Lynch Law more or less, is established in all parts of California. In Sacramento, Marysville, Stockton and elsewhere, the citizens have felt themselves compelled to act in their own behalf—the laws having proved so utterly inadequate in themselves, and their administration by the properly constituted authorities so lax.

Business in California has a better look.

An extra session of the California Legislature is yet talked of earnestly, but is as earnestly resisted as called for.

A native Californian, Francisco Gurro, a man of wealth, had been murdered near San Francisco, on his way home from the city. A Frenchman, suspected of the murder, had been arrested by the Vigilance Comittee.

Dewitt Clinton Shattuck, formerly of Michigan, had been examined on a a charge of killing John Darker, a German, formerly of Philadelphia.

Lynch Law at Sonora—Great Excitement.

By an extra from the office of the Sonora Herald, we have the following particulars.

Attempt to Fire the City!

Sunday Morning, June 29th.—Last night some villian attempted to fire the city by placing a bundle of old canvas on fire under the eaves of a house covered with tar cloth, next door to Dodge's butcher stand. Mr Dodge smelled the burning canvas, and got out of bed just in time to save a terrible conflagration.

12 o'clock.—A large Vigilance Committee is being orgnized, and we shall have a full police of our best citizens standing guard all the while. Woe to the man caught in the act!

The News of Two Weeks.

We take the following synopsis of events from the Alta California of July 15:

Since the departure of the mail steamer on the 1st of the present month, the only event of moment which has transpired in our city has been the trial, conviction, and exacution of a felon, known as Jim Stuart, by the vigilance Committee, a body of citizens of the highest respectability and standing in society. He was hung for a multiplicity of offences, and, by his own confession, voluntary made, was a villian of the most desperate character. He was hung about 2 o'clock, on Friday, the 11th inst., at the end of Market wharf, in the presence of several thousand citizens.

A Spanish woman was hung in Downieville, in the Sacramento Valley, for murdering a man named Cannon, on th 7th, inst.

A rencontre took place on the 1st inst. between Geo. F. Lemon, City Assessor, and Wm. H. Graham, a young Lawyer. Shots were exchanged, and Graham was shot in the mouth and left arm. Lemon immediately gave himself up, but his adversary having told him to draw and defend himself, and suited the action to the word, the Recorder discharged him. Graham is out and doing well.

The Mormons are making a decided movement towards establishing a direct communication from the Salt Lake to the Pacific. A large party have recently arrived from Salt Lake through the Cajon Pass, about sixty miles from Los Angeles, with an expressed determination to settle in that section. They are said to be negotiating for the purchase of a very fine rancho belonging to Senor Antonio Longo.

More Austrian Enlightenment.—The Austrian government has prohibited the use, in public and other schools, of any books written by protestants.

L. W. Powell, (Democrat,) has been elected Governor of Kentucky.

Tidings of Sir John Franklin.

The following communication appeared in the Dundee Advertiser of the 25th ult.:

Dundee, July 22d, 1851.

Mr. Editor:—Though the medium of your highly respectable paper I beg to lay the following important paeticulars before the public:

Discovery of the bodies of four sailors, supposed to be part of the crew who accompanied Sir John Franklin.

On Saturday, 19th ult., the whaler Flora, of Hull, J. Robb, master, who has been out one and a half years, cast anchor at Stromness, and sent her letters and papers by post. A letter was received in Aberdeen on Monday by Mr. John Douglas, King street, from his brother, Mr. G. Douglas, mate of the aforesaid ship. It contains the following affecting narrative:

"In February last our ship's crew partially abandoned the vessel, and erected a snow house on the shore, it being in many respects more comfortable than on board, and better suited for hunting operations. We had been at that time five months frozen up in Lancaster Sound. In one of our excursions we fell in with a party of Esquimaux Indians, nine in number; they had a slight knowledge of our language; they inquired whether we were English or Americans. On being satisfied on that point, they enquired if we belonged to Chief Frankan. The idea now flashed upon our minds that they knew something of Sir John and his crew, and we answered in the affirmative.

They then pointed to the right, to a towering heap of snowy mountains, and by their gestures they signified they had gone to sleep. We brought them to our snow house, when I instantly reported the case to Mr. Robb, our captain, and it was agreed that a party of twelve men would accompany the Indians, and probe their story to the foundation. The party consisted of Mr. Page, our surgeon, J. Brown, carpenter, Wilson, Blair, Hall, Murray, Agnew, Crosely, Jones, Jenkinson, Raffarty, (seamen,) and myself. We had a plentiful supply of provisions, which were packed into a flat-bottomed boat, which was covered with seal skin, and several rifles, spears, &c.

We started on our weary journey on March 27th. Our route was one of the wildest that can be conjectured. We proceeded in a zig-zag course up one hill, down another, then to the right, then the left, then to the right again. On the fouth day symptoms of discontent began to be manifested by our hardy tars, our feet were cut and wounded with the sharp projecting fragments of ice—the thaw was setting in, and we were apprehensive of being buried by the falling avalanche of snow, which descends like lightning down the sides of the mountains. On the 10th day, April 5th, our guides led us into a large natural amphitheatre among the mountains. After a journey of some miles we discried something waving over the snow, it was a black silk hankerchief tied to the top of a walking stick. We eagerly drew out the staff, and commenced operations by digging about two feet deep. We came on the body of a man, and in a few minutes after we discovered other three bodies. They were frozen like icecles; decomposition had not commenced. Their beards were long and shaggy, while their rigid features and wasted limbs spoke in the language of nature—they had died from want.

Their dress was that of British seamen in cold latitudes. One seamen had his name written, or rather engraved on his arm, "H. Carr." The rest were all more or less marked, some had crosses on their breasts, others stars, ships, letters, &c. Our hearts sickened at the sight. We replaced them in their cold, desolate graves, and set up the same sad momento mori. Poor fellows, I exclaimed, you have attempted to regain your homes by an overland journey, but you are left in the desert.

The Indians could give us no more intelligence, so we returned. The most probable conjecture is, a large party had set out from Sir John Franklin's expedition; four had thus perished; in all probabillty the whole of them are now dead.

[Extract from the letter of Mr. G. Douglas to Mr. John Douglas, Aberdeen, on board the Flora.]

By inserting the letter, you will oblige. yours respectfully.

Late from Havana.

New York, Aug. 7.

The steamer Georgia arrived this morning from Havana. She left Chagres on the 27th ult., with 350 passengers, 150 of whom were from New Orleans, and 200 from New York. She also brings 50 passengers from New Orleans, and 30 from Havana—making in all 430.

The Georgia sailed from Havana on the evening of the 2d inst. The Falcon for Chagres, and Cherokee for New Orleans, sailed the same day.

Great excitement prevailed in Havana at the time the Georgia sailed, owing to the reception of news of meetings being held by the citizens of New Orleans in favor of Cuban liberty and independence. The Government had received some important news the night the Georgia arrived.

After the departure of the American steamers several executions had taken place, and but for the refusal of the regiment to fire upon the condemned, there would have been many more.

Pardons have been obtained for all insurrectionists who would throw down their arms, with the exception of the leaders, who will be executed.

South Carolina.—The Laurensville Herald says:

"The accounts of the drought from various sources of our district are truly distressing—in many places there will not be as much corn made as was in 1845. Such is the case, too, in the neighboring districts, except Spartanburg, and we understand their prospects were never much better. We learn, too, from our exchanges, that the same cry of dry sections is prevalent throughout Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi."

From the Benicia Gazette.

Salt Hail—Extraordinary Fact.

To the Editor of the Gazette:

The following is reported by Major Cooper of your city, and other gentlemen in Suism valley. About 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon a violent hail-storm occurred, accompanied by much thunder and lightning. The hail fell the size of ordinary bullets to the depth of two or three inches. Curiosity induced the Major to put one in his mouth, and to his surprise found it was distinctly salt. Not willing to trust to his own senses, he called upon his neighbors to try the experiment. The result was the same, and this extraordinary meteorological fact may therefore be considered as fully established—What will California produce next?

Yours, respectfully.

THE GOLD REGIONS.
COUNCIL BLUFFS AGENCY FERRY.

THIS FERRY has now been in successful operation for two years, and given universal satilfaction to the emigrants and traveling public in general. It is the best crossing on the Missouri river. Proof—Not a dollar's worth of property has been lost at this Ferry, during the last two year's heavy emigration. It is the nearest route to California, Oregon and Salt Lake.

Proof—The first overland emigrants that arrrived at Sacramento, this season, made the trip in fifty-five days from Council Bluffs. It is the healthiest route. Proof—Not a single case of Cholera has occurred on the north side of the Platte, whilst on the south side, this dreadful disease had spread gloom and desolation beyond the worst newspaper accounts that have been published. Some six hundred according to the best information we can obtain have died on that truly fatal route. Caused by the impurities in the water

For further particulars as to the route, we refer you to the best and most correct maps, and to a directory which will be published soon.

IMPROMPTU.

BY SARAH STAGEMAN.

Ye Saints of God do not repine,
Though straight the way and dreary;
The hill is high we must ascend,
Though we are faint and weary.
CHORUS— If we prove faithful to the end,
Then we shall gain the victory;
The victory, the victory,
Through King Immanuel's name.

We're captive exiles far from home,
Where love and peace combine;
And where the Church adorned with gifts,
In light and truth doth shine.
CHORUS— If we prove faithful to the end, &c.

The Lord has promised grace to us,
Sufficient for our day;
Then in his cause let us press on,
Our Lord and King obey.
CHORUS— If we prove faithful to the end, &c.

We'll take the spirit for our sword,
And faith shall be our shield;
Yes! to the mountains we'll repair,
And leave the tempter's field.
CHORUS— If we prove faithful to the end, &c.

The laws of God do there exist,
And blessings rich abound;
We'll bear the cross that we may stand,
On unpolluted ground.
CHORUS— If we prove faithful to the end,
Then we shall gain the victory;
The victory, the victory,
Through King Immanuel's name.

Imaginary Evils.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

Let to-morrow take care of to-morrow;
Leave things of the future to fate;
What's the use to anticipate sorrow?
Life's troubles come never too late!
If to hope over much be an error,
'Tis one that the wise have preferred:
And how often have hearts been in terror
Of evils that never occurred!

Have faith—and thy faith shall sustain thee—
Permit no suspicion and care,
With invisible bonds to enchain thee,
But bear what God gives thee to bear.
By his Spirit supported and gladdened,
Be ne'er by "forebodings" deterred,
But think how oft hearts have been saddened
By fear—of what never occurred!

Let to-morrow take care of to-morrow;
Short and dark as our life may appear,
We may make it still darker by sorrow—
Still shorter by folly and fear!
Half our troubles are half our invention;
And often by blessings conferred,
Have we shrunk in the wild apprehension
Of evils that never occurred!

MISCELLANY.

A Dream.

After a day of severe exercise, and I confess such as not usually belong to one of the gentler, or in common parlance, weaker sex, I was lounging before, and gazing at a beautiful wood fire, until, after watching the variety of images in the coals and ashes, I fell into a slumber.

I dreamed that I was asleep, and had continued to sleep until days passed into weeks, weeks to months, months to years—in short, it was to me as it had been with Rip Van Winkle. I had slept many years, and my locks, which were once jet, were now white. I exhibited every change that usually marks the difference between the young and the old woman. I knew my dwelling, however, in spite of changes, but it was with difficulty I could believe that those who called me mother were really my children. They were, apparently, quite overjoyed that mother had her senses and use of her limbs again.

Had I been crazed or paralyzed, thought I? How is it that there are six persons, in men's habiliments, that call me mother, when I left only two sons and four daughters? One day I called one, whom I could believe to be my son John, and enquired how the case stood. He hesitated, and, at last said—

'Mother, you had better not talk until I ask the doctor, who will soon be at home, about your symptoms. The doctor and lawyer have been at the election and will be home shortly.'

With this he sat down, took up a piece of sewing and began to stitch quite diligently.

Surely! thought I, 'my son John has not turned tailor!' Presently David came in—I knew it to be my son David by his strong likeness to his father. He had a child in his arms, which he was endeavoring to pacify. I felt an impulse to take it from him, believing that I, being a woman could understand its wants better than he; but it clung to him and was not pleased. He gave it its pap without any awkwardness his poor father would have shown.

Whose child? asked I, voluntarily.

The Doctor's, said John. But mother, don't talk.

Forbidden to talk, and filled with amazement at all I saw, I looked out the window to while away the time when I saw a number of horsemen approaching. John and David looked out and exclaimed—

They are coming from the election.

It was a company of oddly-shaped individuals; but they appeared quite skillful horsemen notwithstanding.

After alighting they came in, all regarded me with much interest.

Has she spoken again? asked one.

Yes, Docter! but you had better examine her case.

He approached me and felt my pulse.

'A capital pulse,' said he. 'Let me look at your tongue. Quite clean round the edges, and nearly so in the middle!' he added, and turning to John, he asked if what I had said 'had been altogether lucid.'

'Entirely so,' replied John.

'Mother, do you know me!' asked the Docter.

No, I do not, said I, who are you?

'I am your daughter Elizabeth, and this,' she added, bringing the Lawyer forward, is your daughter Ann, who has this day been appointed a member of the Legislature. Here is your daughter, Sarah, who is President of our Fire Insurance Company, and Susan is an officer in the Navy. You did not know us all the while you were paralyzed, that is plain. This is my husband, whom I chose and addressed after having been refused by several others. Our Lawyer is not yet married. You look so bewildered!—Let me feel your pulse!

I jerked away my hand, and exclaimed—Out upon the farce you are acting! Go put on your proper garments, and then I can tell whether I have my children about me.

I fear she is not sane, said the Doctor, I must take a little blood.'

Stop! cried I, explain to me how it is that, after the long sleep I have had I see none of my sweet gentle girls about me, but a parcel of strangers claiming their names.

A light seemed to strike the lawyer, and he offered to state the case to his mother.

'Mother, I am our daughter Ann, striking her riding whip against her boot emphatically. Since your long sleep, the Rights of Women, which you may have heard spoken of years ago, and set aside as a thing to be established when the Millenium had come—those Rights, so long disputed; those Rights so basely trampled on, (here she arose and used the popular jestures,) have now spread from East to west, and from North to South, of our happy country. Women now vote at elections, climb the hill of science, side by side with men and indeed they have rather the precedence.'

'Even the convenient dress so long usurped by men, has at length been conceded, and the riding hat, coat and collar have, inch by inch gained ground, and now the whole dress is rightfully claimed.'

'The drudgery of the nursery is no longer exclusively ours.'

At this moment another sob from the cradle—they had been many—made the Doctor interrupt the discourse to enquire what ailed the child?

'It don't like pap, and has cried itself to sleep,' replied David

'That was the way with the other little fellow who died. Evidently they have some organic disease, remarked the Doctor.

'Mother! Mother! exclaimed some one shaking, 'what is the matter! What are you groaning about?

I opened my eyes and saw the sweet fair faces of my four young daughters, with their pretty frocks, and aprons, gazing somewhat anxiously in my face.

I was still but half awake. 'Never put on men's clothe, nor ride like them again,' said I solemnly.

'Mother, what do you mean? asked Elizabeth.

'Are you a Doctor?' inquired I.

'No,' answered Elizabeth looking frightened; 'do you want to see a Doctor?

'Ann, are you a Lawyer! Sarah, you are not President of the Fire Insurance company! Nor Susan a captain of the Navy!

By this time it was quite established in my poor children's mind that I raved, but being quite aroused, I told them my terrible dream.

They will, they assure me, crave no rights further than to be good and wise women; and those rights have never been disputed.

Sioux.

There will in all probability, be one or more new States created out of the land our Government have purchased of the Indians, by the treaty just concluded, when the population shall have reached a number entitling them to that rank—Now, in everlasting memory to the race and tribe who have, so far back as we can learn from their incongurous and semi-fabulous history, lorded it over the territory, let it be called Sioux. It is euphonious and brief, and is in harmony with the rule which seems to have governed those who had the naming of the States of the West. Besides, being an Indian word (of conjectural meaning at this time) assimilated to the genius of the French tongue, it would at the same time, seem to remember those early pioneers, who first threaded the wilds from Canada to the Mississippi and laid open the gaze of the old world and the new, the incredible vastness and fertility of the valley of the Mississippi.—[Galena Adv.

Girls are like peaches, the nearer they are ripe, the more they blush.

THE EMPEROR OF CHINA.—The young Emperor of China, who succeeded his father at his death, February, 1850, having at his succession, rejected the demands addressed to him by the Mandarins, for permision to persecute the Christians within his dominions, published a decree in the month of June, in the same year, permitting the free exercise of the Christian religion throughout his dominions. The Emperor at the same time invited four Missionaries to wait upon him, who were to be lodged in his place. Monsignor Perromean, Bishop of China, states that the Emperor was educated by a Christian Lady, in whom the late Emperor placed unbounded confidence.

CAUTION.—Be careful in directing your letters. According to the new official list of post offices in the United States, there are 25 Washingtons, 24 Franklins, 23 Salems, 22 Springfields, 25 Centrevilles, 19 Jacksons, 15 Jeffersons, 18 Lafayettes, 9 Kossuths, 10 Lowells, 20 Richmonds, 18 Waterloos, 22 Columbias, 18 Concords, &c. The direction should always contain the county and State in which the post office is located.

JENNY LIND TO BE MARRIED.—The London Sun of July 11th remarks: "The cordial reception afforded the Swedish Nightingale by our transatlantic brethren, has so greatly delighted that amiable cantatrice, that she has, it is said, made arrangements for a permanent continuance in a 'united state.'" The Sun goes on to state, on unquestionable authority, that Signor Belletti is to be the happy man, and that arrangements have been made for the Nuptials on their return from Canada previous to the voyage from New York for England. Jenny is now at Niagara Falls, where she will remain for several days. She will give only three or four concerts more in this country, and then will leave for Europe via New York on the 16th of August.

This announcement of the fair Jenny's intended marriage will doubtless prove a great source of relief to the "Tom Noddies" of our city, who were busy in conjectures upon the matter of her virginity during her visit here. If must be satisfactory to them to know that Belletti is the man.

From the National Era.

The Mormons Vindicated "By Authority."

The religious creed and civil and social institutions of Mormonism have lately become "fixed facts" in the affairs of the world. They have taken a new attitude and relation to the general system of things, and have thereby themselves become new, without any real intrinsic change; the newness being in the new force of new connections and bearings, new attractions and repulsions, from which, by the laws of vital chemistry, we naturally expect a little effervescence, the evolution of some heat, and the deposit of more or less sediment. Just now we think the froth is the most interesting subject of speculation to the principal agitators.

Upon the organization of Utah Territory, President Fillmore, whatever were his motives or mixture of motives, very properly appointed Mr Brigham Young to the office of Territorial Governor—very properly we say, for the single reason that he was the clear choice of the men, women, and children of the Church, camp, and country, which he was to govern. No appointment to a similar office, made by the National Executive, ever had the actual consent of the people so completely and conclusively as this one, because in no other case was the appointee known and desired by every soul in the community over which he was placed.

But this Mr. Young held the office of leader in the Mormon Church and community, and by a sort of right of succession and ex-officio identity stands responsible to the world for all the sins of his tribe, as well as all the inferences and suspicions that the virtuous vgilance of public opinion puts into the indictment. Besides, the violation of propriety and the impudence of practical criticism which there is in other people's actual success in such mad and fanatical schemes as contradict and oppose our own, there happens also to be a large party involved in the personal necessity of assailing these outlandish Mormons. Whatever was the cause of their expulsion, it was barbarously enforced; and the hands that did it have the taint of plunder, as well as the stain of blood, to justify, for they cannot hide them So, it is every way terrible to have the Mormons emerge from the ruin which might have silenced all discussion, and suddenly assume a position that can purchase the world's favor, and compel its justice. It is probable that history will at an early day make up an enlightened and liberal judgment of the enterprise of these people upon the basis of what they really shall achieve and perpetuate, rejecting the scandal and gossip which clamored so loudly under cover of the darkness and doubtfulness of the first movement.

But this is not the matter in hand exactly, though at the bottom of it.

Early in the present month, the Buffalo Courier, a Democratic paper, on the faith of some returned Californian, for whom the Rochester Daily Advertiser vouched, charged upon the Mormons, and the Mormon Governor, all manner of crimes, political, social, and personal, for the purpose of making President Fillmore culpable in the matter of appointing Brigham Young; alleging that the President well knew the truth of the charged offences at and before the time of nomination. The President, it seems, felt interest enough in this attack made upon him to write to Col. Thomas L. Kane, of Philadelphia, upon whose report of Brigham Young's moral character and standing, made to the President, pending the appointment, he says he relied much. The President says to Col. Kane, "You are Democrat, but I doubt not will truly state whether these charges against the moral character of Governor Young, are true."

Answering to this demand, Col. Kane wrote two letters to the President — one, brief but pointed and inequivocal, and covering all the charges with a general denial, and pledging the most conclusive refutation upon the appearance of any respectable authority for them. This letter is addressed to "the President," and is given for publication at the President's discretion. The other letter is marked "Personal," and is addressed to "Mr. Fillmore." but with liberty expressly given to Mr. F. "to make what use you please of its contents." It contains special notices in detail of all the charges made, and a complete answer to them. Accompanied also by a paper which the Colonel tells the President, "I regret that I have never been authorized to make use of." And so he answers, and stands ready to answer, the demands made, and to be made, upon him in support of the representations which he made to the President touching "the irreproachable moral character of Governor Young, founded upon intimate personal knowledge of him."

All this appears by the Republic (Washington) of the 15th instant. In the Philadelphia Pennsylvanian of the 19th, Col. Kane procured the publication of the President's letter to himself, his reply intended for publication, and his "Personal" letter in full, which has been used in the Republic in scraps and pieces to meet particular uses.

In truth, the Republic made a curious hash of it. Part of the article reads like a note written by the President to the Editor, negligently mixed up with the editorial without change of the terms, by which Col. Kane is made to be the correspondent of Mr. Sargent instead of Mr. Fillmore. Col. Kane seems to think this so open and so obvious that he takes the trouble in his communication in the Pennsylvanian to deny any correspondence with the Editor of the Republic upon this subject; and he hints some disappointment of the confidence he reposed in the President, by refusing to send the document for publication which he regretted (in his letter to the President) he "was not authorized to use," though it was already set out in full in the Republic.

But, for once in the world, it seems that the correction of a scandal is not so quick-footed as the retraction. The Buffalo Corrier of the 17th, printed before the Republic expose could have reached it, withdraws all and singular the offensive charges against the Mormons and Brigham Young, in the fullest and handsomest manner, on the credit of a friend fully and personally acquainted with the affairs of the Mormons, and but lately returned from the Salt Lake Country. The Editor acknowledges himself even touched with Mr. Young's plain but generous and hearty life in his distant home among the mountains, and revolts at lending any countenance to assaults upon his hospitable fireside, which do not spare even the character of its mistress, "whom friendly and hostile report alike asserts to be a truly discreet and lovely lady." Adding in general, "that he is assured that the charges brought against Governor Young are altogether without foundation in fact, and, though a Mormon and leader of Mormons, his character as a man is above reproach—that he proved himself a most hospitable and generous friend to the suffering California emigrants of 1849 and 1850, and that Mr. Polk's Administration had reason to value his patriotism and devotion to the interests of the Union." The Pennsylvanian remarks, in its introduction of the correspondence, that "the experiment of the Mormons in the Great Salt Lake Valley, with their 30,000 of a population, their order, their discipline, their obedience to the laws, and their love of country, go far to disprove many of the assertions of their foes, and indicate a future in the highest degree auspicious and gratifying." And the Republic is also hearty in the defence of the Latter-day Saints, so far as the exculpation of the President requires. That is, on all the points in which the appointment would have involved the President, the Mormons and Governor Young are clearly and fully justified. On the points which the Republic thinks are no business of the Executive, it leaves them to their luck.

The publication of the document furnished by Col. Kane to the President, with a caution which was some how not respected, affords, perhaps, the most interesting feature of the affair. It is an "Address of the Latter-day Saints to President Polk," dated on the West bank of the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Omaha Nation, Aug. 9th, 1846, signed by Brigham Young, President of the Church. It meets two of the charges made in the Buffalo Courier, to wit: "Wholesale abuse of the United States and of our institutions," and "Leaguing with the Indians to harass our people on the road to California." The address informs President Polk that the "Camp of Israel," in answer to his requisition for troops, has furnished a Battalion of five hundred men for Mexican service, "though it has left five hundred of our loaded teams standing on the prairies of the Pottawatamie and Omaha Nation, and nearly as many families destitute of their head and guardians." Besides this practical proof of patriotism, given at the moment of their greatest suffering on the route from Illinois to Deseret, the address contains the strongest expressions of devotion to the Government of the Union; they style it "the best Government on earth," and "the Constitution of the United States as the most precious amongst the nations."

The charge of repeated insults to California emigrants in 1849—'50, is contradicted by the "cards from emigrants, thanking the Camp of Israel for its hospitality and succor in distress."

Another is "laying high and unjust taxes upon men selling property at Salt Lake." Col. Kane explains this matter thus: "The little municipal council of Salt Lake City did, at its first organization, and before the United States or any other Government had noticed its existence, enact that a tax should be levied on all sales of spirituous liquors within the City bounds. This tax must have been heavy, too; for I think it was intended to be almost prohibitory—the Mormons as a sect favoring and enforcing temperance measures, and doing their best to prevent the sale of whiskey to the savages around them. I have only to say, that if emigrant citizens everywhere could be placed under such restraints, the War Department would hear less of their suffering from Indian outrages."

The charge of polygamy, or the spiritual-wife doctrine, made against Gov. Young, is flatly contradicted by Col. Kane as a "brutal slander," affecting no one so much as Mrs. Young and her family, who are residing now in New England, and are among its most respectable people.

The list of offences, nine in number, opened with murder in Missouri and Illinois, and grew gradually worse and worse, till it climaxed with "this creature Young is an open abuser of Democracy." For the refutation of the first charge, Judge Douglas (now United States Senator from Illinois) is referred to; he presided in the judicial district which embraced Nauvoo and the Mormon precinct, and, it is said, will testify that the criminal charges preferred against the Mormons in his district were ignored by the grand juries, and were foundationless in fact. The crowning villany of abusing Democracy, i. e. the Democratic party, the Buffalo Courier is particularly happy to retract; for Governor Young seems to turn right side up in that respect, notwithstanding his appointment by the Whig Administration.

There lies the secret, open enough. Political power, political consideration, loosens the bandage from the eyes of public justice and the blundering hussy begins to see the right and reason of things, even in reference to the Mormons. It is well; and perhaps it is some sort of right, too, and the world will pay attention to those only who are of some account in its affairs. Utah will come of age soon, and ask her share of the inheritance with her older sisters; prosperity will establish her reputation, and, in the main, vindicate it, too; for the offences charged against her people are of that kind which do not consist with the public welfare.

Simply as an experiment it is worth to the world more than the world can possibly suffer by it. It is some sort of an attempt to inaugurate some sort of a religion in the civil and economical institutions of society; it is an endeavor to bring the "higher law," if it even be not the highest notion of it, into every-day use, and to give it authority in politics and business, as the way opens. We are glad the mountains shut them in, and are contented that they shut them out, too, till the experiment is tried. New revelations may do mischief, but they cannot be worse than denying the old ones. There is some life, and there may be some use, in a fresh imposture. Mahomet's did well when it was new—better than Judaism when it was old—better than the corpse of Christianity when its spirit is fled. Mormon fanaticism has proved its pluck—it has done something. Providence has stood by it, for it is brave and strong. It has something to do in the world; and, if it escapes the blight of political snobbery, it may accomplish it, against even greater faults than it is charged with,

SENIOR.

P. S. The Republic of the 22d inst., copies Col. Kane's publication in the Pennsylvanian, entire, and explains the small faults of its first article, and puts the President all right in the matter. But we beg leave to say to the Editor, that, if it is all the same to him, it would be a relief to the people if he would distinguish a little more clearly between himself and the President. When he talked, in his first article, of Col. Kane's letter "to us" we imagined the President's copy was followed by the types; but now again we have "John Jones" in the Executive boots, for he says in his last article, "the Mormon message was placed at our disposal." The our in that sentence can only represent Mr. Fillmore, if the fact is to govern; and if Mr. Sargent is deliberate and positive in his position, he is in danger of losing his identity, and his readers are exposed to the danger of mistaking him for the President, or, what is the same thing, holding the President responsible for him.

Letter From Elder John Hyde, Jr.

Pic Nic Excursion of the Latter-day Saints, In the Island of Jersey, (France,) On the 24th of July, 1851.

While the Saints were rejoicing in the valleys of the mountains, and solemnizing the Anniversary, of the entrance of the pioneers, on the 24th July, 1847; those at Jersey, were neither unmindful of the day, nor felt less determined to enjoy themselves.

An excursion having been previously arranged for that day, they met at their Hall at 9 o'clock, and after singing, prayer, and short address, in which was stated that the object of this excursion was to commemorate the 24th July, 1847.

It was resolved that Elder Pack be President; Elder Dela Mare, be Marshal; Elder McNaughten, Chaplain; Elder John Hyde, be Secretary, and Messrs. Cave & Betterson, were appointed Superintendents of Refreshments.

With our eyes delighted by twelve brethren uniformly dressed, and an equal number of beautiful sisters in white; our ears charmed with the melody of an excellent Band, which had been provided; our hearts rejoicing in the recollections of the past, and exhilerated by hopes for the future — We entered the carriages at 10 o'clock.

Such an event in the World, so signalized by discontent and disorder, was accomplished by the Saints without an angry word, or even a dissatisfied look.

A vast assembly of persons lined the streets, and saw with surprise a long line of the best Carriages roll rapidly past, filled with happy Saints, whose songs of joy awakened the echoes of the town of St. Helleas.

After an exhilarating ride through the most lonely spots of this interesting Island, we halted at the romantically wild caves of Pleirmont; where gathered round our President, our heads uncovered and hands elevated, while our hearts were beating with joy, and burning with love to all men; we shouted Hosanna, Hosanna, Hosanna, to God and to the Lamb, Amen, Amen, and Amen.

After a sumptuous repast on the cloth-covered grass; among the items of which repast were some Beef roasted on a turf fire, and resting on a stone, still more forcibly calling to mind the event we had met to commemorate.

Some brethren accompanied by the Band, sang "A Life on the Desert Plain," after which Elder Pack rose and said:

I am glad to meet you under such favorable circumstances as the present, to celebrate the day on which myself with the pioneers entered the Valley, the resting place of the Saints of the Most High. It is more than seven years since the Prophet of the Lord was slain, when the earth was stained with that righteous man's blood; one who loved mankind who stood by his friends until death, who sacrificed himself for his brethren. I thank God I live to behold this day, after having traveled eight thousand miles with my brethren from our homes, and families, to proclaim the Gospel of Christ. I can fully appeciate in this to me a foreign land, such a scene as this, when the song of praise is reverberating from hill to hill, and the spirit of God flowing from heart to heart. I rejoice in having my name written and known in the Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter-day Saints. I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, nor of his people; I have proved them true and faithful, I have been with them in persecution and suffering, and while death has stared them in the face, then still they have proved firm in their integrity to their brethren and to their God.

I thank the Lord for what I now behold, the rolling forth of his Kingdom among the nations of the earth, for many Prophets and Patriarchs have desired to see these things, but have died without the sight; I know the multiplied religions of the day are false, and when brought to the test will be found wanting; when the inhabitants of the earth are brought before the Bar of Jehovah, then shall they know that Joseph is a true Prophet of God, a friend to all men; and the things he spake were things of reality, even the eternal truths of Heaven. When the earth shall reel to and fro like a drunken man, and be removed like a Cottage, then shall the Saints stand firm as the Pillars of Heaven, and many millions shall rejoice in the glorious blessings we have received. Nations afar off shall test these things, and the time is not far distant, when thousands and tens of thousands, of the eastern and western hemispheres, and the remotest Isles of the Sea, shall resound Hosanna, Hosanna, Hosanna, to God and to the Lamb. Are we not a happy people? Yes we are!

It is a little more than twenty-one years since the Church of Jesus Christ was re-organized on the earth, and in the midst of sorrow, suffering and death, which we as people have endured for the Gospel sake; even then we could rejoice in the God of our salvation. We care not for the things of this World, neither Gold nor Silver; we have forsaken homes, friends, kindred, all for the Gospel of Christ, restored through our Martyred Prophet. We care not for the smiles or frowns of man, our trust is in the arm of God; we fear no people or kingdom, for wherever we dwell, we are loyal and obedient to the authorities and laws of that Nation. In conclusion let me add, keep the commandments of God, and God will bless you, and I will bless you, and you will be blessed for evermore. Amen.

The Saints then sang, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah."

We re-entered our Carriages, and drove to another beautiful spot of the Island, where with France in view, (the scene of our future labors;) We again regaled ourselves with refreshments, of which a bountiful supply had been provided.

After which we returned, arrived at our Hall, warmly greeted by a concourse of friends, and commenced another service by singing and instrumental music—a prayer was made by the Chaplain, who afterwards read a portion of scripture in the 1st Corinthians 12th chap., and on the 264 page of the Book of Mormon.

Elder Dunbar rose and said: I feel glad at appearing before you, my heart is full of joy at what I have witnessed to-day, we have done it in peace, and with plenty; but yet by beef and turf fire, have endeavored to assimulate to the Pioneers; I feel to compare our position with theirs, when they were driven from Nauvoo, and at the point of the bayonet and musket's mouth, were obliged to leave their homes, their City, and their Temple, forced into the wilderness, and away from their wives and children. The Pioneers, noble, devoted men entered the Valley, provided a home for the Saints. All hail to the Pioneers, may they all live to participate in the blessings they have caused so many to enjoy. Amen.

After a song of Zion by the Choir, accompanied by the Band; Elder Pack said:

I feel happy to meet the Saints again: while we have been enjoying ourselves, I have thought of the time when this Church was organized, six then included the whole. The little ones have become thousands, there are hundreds of thousands rejoicing in the knowledge and peace of the Gospel of Christ, and if the increase on six have done so much in twenty-one years, what will the increase on hundreds of thousands do in forthcoming time? I leave it for nations to reply and consider. We have been persecuted, and ministers have led our enemies, but now we can rest in peace for a season. With the glittered of steel at our backs, we were driven out, but the Priesthood will have its day, and Zion will arise and shine; be faithful that you with Zion may put on your beautiful garments, when the prophecies shall be accomplished, and Ephraim shall be crowned with honor, power and eternal life: the Lord bless you. Amen.

After some instrumental music, an address from the Chaplain, votes of thanks to the various officials, and prayer by the President, the Saints seperated fused into one by the spirit of unity, and fired with a determination strongly invincible to endure to the end. Amen.

JOHN HYDE JR., SEC'Y.

A SINGULAR TREE.—In the Island of Goa, near Bombay, there is a singular tree—"the sorrowful tree"—because it only flourishes in the night. At sunset no flowers are to be seen, and but, half an hour after, it is quite full of them. They yield a sweet smell, but the sun no sooner begins to shine upon them, than some of them fall off, and others close up. This continues throughout the year.

COMING OUT FROM THE FOUL PARTY.—William Smith O'Brien has accepted a ticket of leave from Van Dieman's land, offered him by the British Government, for six months absence.

California—Its Position.

The Sacramento Times of the 27th June, in a leading editorial article, sketches the present position of California. It seems to be written in a tone of truth and candor. We make the following extract, which indeed embraces the gist of the article:

California at the present time occupies a somewhat anomalous position. Although the mining portion of our population are doing better than laborers in any other part of the world, trade languishes, and there are thousands who are hardly making a living. In our commercial towns, and elsewhere throughout the State, portions of those engaged in trade can scarcely clear expenses. To supply a population of one hundred, or one hundred and fifty thousand miners, we have half as many merchants. In every portion of the state these men are to be found—from the dealer in his millions to the man whose stock in trade scarcely reaches ten dollars. California very truly may be said to be a community of traders, and the great misfortune is, that they all expect to become rich by trading, with this undue proportion of actual producers. The amount of gold, however large, acquired by each miner, would not suffice to sustain this vast number of shop-keepers.

The population of California at the present time is variously estimated at from two hundred and fifty to three hundred thousand. Suppose to equal the highest figure, we do not think there are any who can estimate the actual miners at over one hundred and fifty thousand. If we take into our cities and large towns, it will be seen the number is very large; but, add to this the merchants and dealers at every bay, and who are scattered along the public highways in every part of the State, and their name is legion.

It is true all are not merchants who are engaged in mining. Some are following mechanical pursuits, while others are engaged in agriculture; but they have in this way, as yet, hardly added to the wealth of the country. They are rather preparing to do something in the future, which will be productive. The mechanics are partially exceptions to this rule, but to no great extent. If we set aside for agricultural and mechanical pursuits, together with those who are following no regular occupation, one-fourth of our population, there will remain another fourth who are simply traders.

That too large a number of persons are engaged in trade in California, to admit of their becoming suddenly rich, we think there can be no dispute, and if there be disparaging reports from this portion of our population, it should excite no surprise.

For a time after the rush to California the rapid advance in real estate formed a medium by which men measured their wealth, and if absolutely without other semblance of property, they deemed themselves rich, but this semblance is now gone. Lots and lands, which a few months since were the representatives of thousands, are too often only an incubus upon the owner, and not worth the taxes imposed. It is thus that what was at first deemed an ample fortune, now seems but a shadow. Is it strange under such circumstances, that men should begin to look around to learn where they really stand? Is it singular, that men who have supposed themselves worth their thousands, when the delusion no longer exists, should express uneasiness and dissatisfaction?

The truth is, the miners are very generally doing well, but the merchants as a body are not. The first class are making good wages, and are surely accumulating a competance, but the latter class is altogether to large for the country, and must very credibly decrease before the profits will be sufficient to meet their expectations.

For the Frontier Guardian,

Sayings.

Hear, Oh ye children, the discipline of the mouth; he that keepeth it, shall never be taken in his lips.

The sinner shall be left in his foolishness: both the evil speaker and the proud shall fall thereby.

Accustom not thy mouth to swearing neither use thyself to the naming of the Holy One.

He that swareth, and nameth God continually shall not be faultless.

A man that useth much swearing shall be filled with iniquity, and the plague shall never depart from his house; if he shall offend, his sin shall be upon him: and shall acknowledge not his sin, he maketh a double offence; and if he swear in vain, he shall not be innocent, but his house shall be full of calamities.

There is a word that is clothed about with death.

Use not thy mouth to intemperate swearing, for there in is the word of sin.

WISDOM.

People talk about hard work—there is no work harder in the summer season than that of a printer, who for twelve hours or more, stands over a case in a hot office, moving his arms and body to the dull music made by the clickling of the types he picks up.

The man over the falls of the Niagara, turned out to have been a stuffed figure sent by the hack drivers and guides for their own benefit. They heaped a harvest the next day by pointing out the body, gyrating on the surface of the whirlpool!

Recently a gentleman in the neighborhood of the ancient City of Rheims, in making an excavation for some purpose, discovered a human skeleton, well preserved, which was four metres (thirteen feet) in height

Summary of News.

Since our last issue, we are in receipt of cheering news from the traveling Elders, in various parts of the United States. The success which has attended their labors, show, that a goodly number of persons are anxious to know the truth, and receive it upon presentation at all hazards; notwithstanding the continual tirade of abuse in circulation, respecting us as a people.

Elder James McGaw, writes from Grimes Co., Texas, under date of the 20th July, stating that he was warmly received there by the Saints, and also by those who do not belong to the Church or profess the faith of the Saints. He says also; that the Saints in that quarter will be on their move westward next Spring; and from the counsel given by Elder Hyde to Br. McGaw, we believe that he will urge the necessity of the Saints' removal to the Valley the coming season.

The latest dates received from Elder Isaac Bullock, is from Oswego Co., New York, where he was laboring faithfully in awakening the Saints to a sense of their duty, and preaching the Gospel of Christ to all those that would hear him.

David M. Gamet, writes from Niagara Co., New York, where he says, he can find now and then, a scattered head of wheat, fit to be gathered into the Garner.

Richard Cox, writes from Joe Davis Co., Illinois, and says; that Elder David E. Bunnel, had visited them in that region, and after preaching twice, had baptized sixteen persons; eight of which had never been received into the Church before.

The following extract we copy from Elder A. D. Boren's letter, who wrote from Marion, Illinois, August 1st.:

"I can say, that I have been happily disappointed in some places, to find the people inclined to hear and prove. The people in this section are friendly, and I have preached all I could, during the busy season of the year; at present I have all I can do, and my labor is not in vain, for many believe and are willing to obey the Gospel. I have appointments where they have refused to hear the saints. I have also found some of the Saints, who, in a day of trial shrunk; but now have renewed their covenant and are determined to go ahead in the work of the Most High."

Elders Candland and Brown, in their letter from Cambria, Niagara Co., New York, dated August 3d, says:

"I give you a synopsis of our labors in Nauvoo, Tioga Co., Pennsylvania. Here we found a people ready to believe, and would have embraced the doctrine of Christ, had we time to tarry with them, and take advantage of the ground we had gained. Priest and people were on our side, and both seemed determined to load us with kindness. Churches were opened for us on the right and on the left, and lighted up with gas free of charge.

We are well and in good spirits; full of hope and buoyant feeling. God has been our helper in truth, and very deed. We leave to-morrow for Nova Scotia. Br. Smith in Halifax, is very anxious to have us go there, and preach to the people of that large and populous City."

The last communication from Elder D. E. Bunnel, is dated August 4th. Trenton, Wayne Co., Michigan, at which place he was warmly received by the Saints, and baptized two at the close of his first meeting there.

The latest received from Elders Candland and Brown, is dated Boston, August 11th, on their way to Nova Scotia.

Elders Carroll and Robinson, were in Cuyahoga Co., Ohio, on the 12th ult. On the 1st they baptised six, and on the day following one more, They represent the prospect in that region of country favorable, and state that those who have been baptized, feel anxious for the day of their deliverance to arrive.

From every quarter where the traveling Elders had visited, there seems to be a fresh spirit imbibed into the hearts of the Saints; and in unison with the spirit and tenor of the last General Epistle of the Presidency in the Valley. The gathering is all the cry, and we hope that this spirit may be more widely diffused until every Saint shall feel the necessity of complying with the sacred mandates of Heaven, which is calculated to save them from the impending danger hanging over an unbelieving World.

Ex-Bishop George Miller, Envoy Extraordinary, and Minister Plenipotentary, from King James Strang's Court, of Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, paid the citizens of our town and country a visit about two weeks since. He asked the privilege of speaking to the Saints here, in their assembled capacity. Elder E. M. Greene, President of the Branch told him, that he would leave that matter for the members of the Branch to decide on Sunday the 31st ult. Accordingly about half past 11 o'clock forenson, the Ex-Bishop and suit made their appearance, and unsolicited made for the stand, and took their seat before a large and respectable audience of Saints, and friends.

The courtly suit consisted of two men, of the name of Bacon and Prindle. After being seated, every few minutes, the Envoy felt necessitated to wait upon a bucket of water standing by, to quench his unsatiated thrist. This last circumstance strongly reminded us of the case of Dives and Lazarus. If the Ex-Bishop was not actually in the torments of the ——— it seemed apparent to us, from facts transpiring, that he consumed a considerable quantity of water to cool his parched tongue; and we think the best thing he could do, would be, to despatch a messenger forthwith to his brethren to inform them not to come to this place, lest the same panic befall them also. After transacting the Branch business, the diplomatic request of the MINISTER was laid before the assembled multitude; and they were asked by the Presidency of the Branch, if they were ready to hear from Ex-Bishop Miller. With the velocity of lightning the response came from every quarter of the congregation, No! No!! NO!!! Upon hearing this unfavorable reception; George Miller expressed his disappointment in being rejected a hearing from a people with whom he had in past times been associated. No wonder! who would hear a man whom the Saints had proved, and found out to be lacking in that, which is esteemed by the Most High to be better than sacrifices and of more value in his sight than the offering of Rams?

We answer not we. We will let him—his associates, and King Strang alone; we hold no fellowship with them; their ostentatious character, and wicked practices, in days past, rendered them fit subjects to be cut off from our Church, —the Church having accomplished her part, they are now in the hands of him, who judges those that are without the pale of her sacred institutions.

We have been credibly informed that Gladden Bishop will soon be here. What is the reason, that so many of these meteoric visitors are abroad, and coming to this place? The only reason we can assign is; to throw confusion among the Saints of God if they can, and to divert their attention from their line of duty.

We would call to the remembrance of the Saints in this section of country, the words of our beloved President, which is contained in the tenth number of the Guardian, and reads as follows:

"The Saints should watch and pray that they may not become the subjects of deception and imposture; and those who retain the spirit of the Lord, we are confident never will. Pray also, that speedy judgment from Heaven may come on all those who give false revelations to deceive, and beguile. Attend to your business and duties, to your prayers, and blessings in their season—to your labor temporal and spiritual while it is called to-day—to your fastings before you are compelled—to your alms while you have something to bestow; and to help no man to make a calf for you to worship, while your Moses is gone to the mountains to see his Moses."

The day of trial always comes before the day of blessings,—it is only the faithful that will enjoy the latter; therefore take heed to your ways, serve the Lord, and every one of you shall have your recompense in due season.

Reports.

This day, (Wednesday the 10th inst.,) it is said that various letters have been received by several individuals in this town, from A. W. Babbitt Esq., who left this place last Spring, for Salt Lake. These letters are said to contain certain suppositions; these suppositions have been converted by some here, into what they call facts; and from these man-u-fractured facts, some feel alarmed, excited, and wish to know. All we have got to say on the subject, is; that God has ordained a channel through which truth, or any information beneficial to his Saints should come. When it comes that way, we receive it without doubt; but coming any other way we are very much disposed to doubt the greater portion of it.

The Lord has his agents on earth, so has the evil one his. The former is honorable and trustworthy; the latter is corrupt and deceptive. Any information that may be of benefit to the Saints comes through the legal channel and is productive of order; while that which comes any other way, always produces confusion and disorder. Some men hold the truth in unrighteousness, others because of their faith and good works, are eligible to the sacred treasure, and receive it in its proper time and season, and rejoice in it. Every tree may be known by its fruit; a good tree bringeth forth good fruit; contrariwise, a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. We would suggest to the Saints to be patient, the day is at hand that will reveal all things; therefore be not moved from your stedfastness by spirit, or by letter, but attend to all your respective duties, and prepare as many of you as can, to leave in the Spring for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, and God will bless you.

Praiseworthy.

Much has been latterly written through Newspaper columns, about the Mormons in Utah, and their honorable Governor, Brigham Young. On our first page the reader will find an article headed; "THE MORMONS VINDICATED BY AUTHORITY."

This article appeared in the National Era, July 31st, published at Washington City, D. C., and purports to be the production of the Senior Editor of that well conducted Journal. We feel it our duty to give that generous, and patriotic gentleman credit, for his liberal and candid views respecting the Mormons at Salt Lake, and elsewhere. His remarks are timely—his views liberal—the whole tenor of his article breathes Republicanism in its primitive state, and philantropy in its purest form. When sound principle governs actions, unaided and uncontroled by prejudice, superstition, tradition, or sectioinl bigotry, then, and not till then, is man bound to come out, what his Creator designed him to be; A FREE MAN. He, whom the truth makes free, is free indeed!

What Can the Reason Be?

Elder John Taylor's Family have not received a line from him since he left the Missouri River; though they have written to him nearly every Mail. Millennial Star, please copy.

Disasters in Ohio.

A correspondent writes from Lucas County, Ohio, under date of the 12th ult. His letter contains the following distressing occurrences:

The Toledo Blade, of the 7th August, gives an account of four awful and terrible hurricanes, and hail storms in that vicinity; which have in many places completely destroyed vegetation, and at one place, not less than twelve barns were destroyed by lightning. Some of the farmers say; that they have not anything left to satisfy the cravings of nature.

When I was in Alleghany Co., Pennsylvania, vegetation was almost burnt off the face of the land, in that section, and the crops suffering severely from grass-hoppers; so much so, that many had to cut their Oat crops green, to save them for feed. Where I am at present, the season has been so wet, that it has been impossible almost to raise anything. The best crop was the Potatoes; but within this last week they have been struck with disease, and are rotting worse than they have ever been before.

Fugleman! Fugle-Gun!!

The St. Joseph Gazette of the 10th, inst., contains an article headed MORMONISM, "NEWS FROM THE PLAINS." This article as usual is fraught with wicked and bare-faced lies, which we are ready to prove to a candid public.

The Gazette says: "Judge Brocchus, one of the Associate Justices, for the Territory of Utah, was accompanied on his way out by Elder Orson Hyde who is the leader of the Mormons at Council Bluffs, and who had under his charge TWO pieces of Cannon belonging to the Government. On the 4th of July, Judge Brocchus requested the use of the Cannon, to fire a National Salute, near INDEPENDENCE ROCK, in commemoration of our Independence, which Orson Hyde denied him, saying that when they reached Utah, he might fire a salute."

Ye lovers of truth, give your attention! Elder Hyde left this town on the 28th of June; Judge Brocchus on Sunday, the day following; see Guardian No., 12, Vol. 3.

Judge Brocchus had only one CANNON in charge, as the Commandant at Fort Leavenworth well knows. Elder Hyde had no control over it, neither did he wish to have any. The Gazette man gives Elder Hyde five days to travel to INDEPENDENCE ROCK, a distance of six hundred and ninety-eight and three quarter miles; making at an average, nearly one hundred and forty miles per day. This is not all; we refer our readers to Elder Hyde's letter, published in the 15th number of the Guardian, dated the 22d of July, one hundred and eight miles East of Laramie, on the Platte River, two hundred and eighty-four and three quarter miles this side of Independence Rock, at that date. Oh consistency, thou art a Jewel!

The Editor of the Gazette, will please reconcile this matter to the public. As to Mr. Hyde making application for the office of Surveyor of Public Lands, in the Territory of Utah, we say; it is a palpable falsehood, and we know it, and we ask the Editor of the Gazette to bring forward his proof in the affirmative. We leave the matter here, and appeal to the Public, for their just conclusion relative to the other insinuations, introduced by the Fugle-Gun of the Gazette.

Interview.

On Friday, the 12th inst., George A Mix, Esq., of Dubuque; special Mail Agent, for the Post Office Department stepped into our Sanctum. We had quite an interview with him, and we think from our short acquaintance with the gentleman, that the Department could not have selected a better man to look after their interest and the public welfare in general. Long may such men fill the offices of honor, and trust, under the Star Spangled Banner of our Nation.

Cuba.

The News from Cuba is very exciting, and contradictory, and now hard to tell what the real state of affairs are. But we give our readers the news to as late dates as have been received. In many parts of the United States, expressions of sympathy are given in favor of the "Invaders", and in many places a spirit of revenge against the authorities of Cuba, for the manner that they have killed the Americans.

Shooting.

Several persons of late have been in our office complaining sadly of being nearly shot, while attending to their lawful business, about their stores, and behind dwelling houses. It is said that some, without any regard to distance or place, are addicted to this habit, and even in stores, and behind dwelling houses, the practice is followed up. We have plenty back ground in this western country; therefore if any feel very anxious to practice shooting, let them go out of town a mile or two, and shoot as long as they please. To carry on the practise in town, shows the low estimate placed upon life; it also shows that whoever carries on this practice any longer, is anything but a gentleman. A hint to the wise is sufficient.

Oysters.

Mr. F. Stine, a gentleman from St. Joseph with a stock of goods; handed to us the other day, a can of Baltimore Cove Oysters, for the boys in the office. We touched our beaver in return, and in the evening tried them with the rest of the fraternity. We all pronounced them first rate; their flavor is peculiar, because we esteem the donor a friend. More of the same kind may be had, by calling at the store of Mr. Gooch, one door South East of the Printing Office. Also Sardines.

Miner's Daily Express.

The third and fourth number of this neat little paper is on our table. It reflects a great deal of credit on its enterprizing proprietors, Messrs. William H. Merritt & Co., especially on the gentleman who wields the pen in the Sanctum. The mechanical part is very well executed also. Success to Dubuque; may her shadow never grow less!

Mormons at Salt Lake.

We see by late advices from this City of confusion and corruption, that the Mormons have commenced their old trade of plunder. What else can we expect of men more knavish than deluded—whose leaders encourage a social profligacy and licentiousness, which has no parallel in civilized life?—[Miner's Express.

"For TRUTH we sink our shaft:—We drift upon the vein of PRINCIPLE."

The foregoing are the colors nailed to the mast head of the Miner's Express, published at Dubuque, in this State. Mr. Express, please allow us to correct you. You missed it that time! You sank your shaft for ERROR: You drifted on the vein of SLANDER. This is not the only time neither; it has been an inert quality of your being, to drift in such a channel. If the ETHIOPIAN can change his skin, or the Leppard his spots; so may you, who have been accustomed to do ——, learn to do ——.

Letter from Elder John Pack, &c.

Our readers will find on our first page, a document from Mr. John Hyde Jr., and believing that it might be interesting to our friends; more especially to the Saints, we cheerfully give it a place in our columns.

The following is from the pen of Br. Pack, who passed through this place a year ago last Winter, in connection with others, on important missions to the British Isles, France, Denmark, and Italy.

No 2, LA MOTTE STREET, ST. HELLIER, ISLE OF JERSEY, (FRANCE,) Aug. 1st, 1851.

ELDER HYDE:

DEAR SIR:—If the enclosed, (referring to Mr. John Hyde's document) shall meet with your approval, please give it a place in your valuable paper.

Elder Taylor left here one month since for Germany; but is yet detained at Liverpool.

Elders Lorenzo and Erastus Snow, when last heard from, were in London.

The Saints have been mobbed in Denmark; their Chapel torn down, and Elder Dykes not permitted to land. You will hear more of it from Liverpool. I have not received the particulars of all that was done.

The work of God is rolling on here with great rapidity. We are baptising some, almost every day, and all the Saints are bound for Zion, as soon as time and means will permit.

Farewell! I remain,
Your humble Servant,
In the Gospel of Christ,
JOHN PACK.

For the Frontier Guardian.

INDEPENDENCE, Aug. 30th, 1851.

DEAR BR. MACKINTOSH:

Salt Lake Mail has just arrived, I give you a few items which you may not get from your exchanges; it got in last evening, being twenty-nine days out—met a large number of Indians on their way to hold a treaty at Fort Laramie; most of the tribes will be there; the Crows hold the whites in too much contempt it is said, to take any notice of the invitation. The Mail met Col. Chambers and party, getting on slow, seventy miles the other side of Fort Kearney; one of the English noblemen had two of his two hundred dollar horses stolen; notwithstanding they were on guard.

One large mule train has got in from Salt Lake, being out forty days; they represent business as being middling good, whilst they were there, but think it will be very dull most of the summer.

A train has also got in from Santa Fe; business is remarkably dull there, provision and bread stuff scarce; government have removed all their troops to the town of Moro, situated one hundred miles this side of Santa Fe; this, it is said, will use up the latter town.

This place is at present quite healthy, but has suffered severely from that scourge the cholera. Business is dull, the river is getting quite low. The last Boat I was on, the Banner State, stuck on a sand bar four or five hours between this place and Weston. At Weston I had the pleasure of conversing with an officer of the Army, direct from Oregon, who stopped ten days at Salt Lake City; he was much pleased with the beauty, the order and regularity of the City, and declared with a degree of enthusiasm, seldom indulged in by persons not connected with the Church; that in less than ten years it would be the finest City in the Union.

This is but one of a great many persons, that I have seen recently from California, who have stopped at Salt Lake City, who declare that the Mormons are an enterprising, and industrious, and an hospitable people. But there are some buzzards in the United States who are very fond of carrion, and the St. Louis Intelligencer, has furnished them with a very pretty dish of lies, and slander which is going the rounds of the country papers. Said to be written by an officer of unimpeachable character, in the United States Army; this contains the most outrageous language, and the most wholesale abuse against our brethren in the Valley, of anything that has yet appeared for some time, in any St. Louis paper. As a general thing the St. Louis papers deserve the credit of speaking in an honorable manner of the Saints of God; but it seems the devil is getting alarmed, and is afraid the emigration will continue; and he is consequently using this unimpeachable officer of the United States Army, to stop it. But I am sure he will have no influence with the Saints in Kanesville, or anywhere else, for all the falsehoods that have ever been written against the Church, have always been wrote by such unimpeachable characters.

Your Brother in Christ,
H. L. S.

For the Public Good.

Mr. Joseph T. Pendleton, Postmaster, St. Francis, has on hand a large supply of Postage Stamps. Now's your time you letter writers, to save yourselves from a good deal of trouble.

To the Saints Abroad!

As we learn that Mr. Bacon, one of Strang's missionaries, accompanying Ex-Bishop George Miller is holding forth to the Saints, that he is not an excommunicated member, and that he is still in good standing with the Church.

This is therefore, to notify all the Saints, and the world, that all who followed Strang, Brewster, Wight, or any other false leaders, having gone out from the Church, after having known the way of truth, was, by a full vote of a General Conference; held in the Spring of A. D., 1848, disfellowshiped.

Lopez Victorious in two Engagments—60 Officers and 300 Men Killed—Rising of the People—Hundreds joining Lopez—Col. Crittenden Shot—Destructive Storm in Isabia—Our Government demanding explanation of the Spanish Authorities—Indignation Meeting in Philadelphia, &c., &c.—Tremendous Riot in New Orleans—Destruction of the Spanish Office "La Patria"—Attack on the Spanish Consul—Arrival of the Bodies of the Havana Victims.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 25, P. M.

We have accounts from New Orleans of the arrival of the Empire City, with dates from Havana to the 18th. The steamer Dixon has also arrived at Pensacola, but they bring no particular news; they confirm previous accounts, and give some little additional information.

General Lopez had made a stand at Morich, where he had two engagements with the troops, in both of which he had been victorious. The Spanish loss in killed and wounded, eighty officers and three hundred men. The dead and wounded were taken to Havana, where the former were buried with great pomp on the 15th. Lopez's force numbered about fourteen hundred, and he was daily receiving accessions. On the night of the 14th, over one hundred left Havana to join the invaders, and the people were rising in many quarters. Col. Crittenden is reported by this arrival as among the prisoners shot.

BOSTON, Aug. 23, P. M.

Last evening the village of Waterton, West Cambridge, Summerville, Medford and Malden, were visited by a dreadful tornado, that swept the space of five rods in width with fearful violence. Houses, factories, sheds, and barns were unroofed or thrown down, trees uprooted and immense damage done, some say to the amount of $10,000. Many individuals were injured, and two men were blown across the Mystic river at Medford.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25, P. M.

The intelligencer says that dispatches have been received from Mr. Owen, the American Consul at Havana, stating that the prisoners shot were tried before the execution. The Government will require an explanation from the officers of the Government at New Orleans, for their apparent neglect in allowing the departure of the Pampero.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25, P. M.

Government has ordered the frigate Saranac, Com. Parker, to sail immediately for Havana, to demand an explanation of the shooting of the party of Americans, and for firing upon the Falcon. She will sail from Norfolk to-day or to-morrow.

Rigid instructions are being issued to all officers of government to suppress and break up any armed expedition against Cuba fitting out from any port in this country.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 25, P. M.

An immense mass meeting was held in Philadelphia, in Independence square, to express indignation at the proceedings of the Spanish authorities, at Havana, in the execution of the prisoners, and other offensive measures; not less than 12,000 to 15,000 persons were present. Colonel James Swift acted as President, assisted by a large number of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 25.

Charleston papers of Saturday received to-day, have dispatches from New Orleans, giving accounts of a fearful riot in that city. A party of Cuban liberators, mostly exiled men, exasperated at the tone of certain articles in the Spanish paper "La Patria," relative to Cuba, attacked the office, broke in the door and windows, threw the press and cases into the street, and destroyed everything belonging to the office. The police made no attempt to interfere with their movements.

The mob, after demolishing the office of the paper proceeded to the cigar store at the corner of St. Charles and Gravier's streets, breaking in the doors and windows, and destroying all the stock and furniture, which were very valuable. At 7 o'clock the rioters proceeded to the office of the Spanish Consul and attacked it, and destroyed all the furniture and property which was destructible; they also broke down the signs of Spaniards, which were carried in triumph to a large meeting held in Lafayette Square. A later dispatch from New Orleans of the 23d says, that 2,000 persons had that morning surrounded the city prison, in which the Spanish Consul had taken refuge, and threatened to demolish it unless the Consul was given up to them. There were about fifty policemen on the ground.

The cigar shops kept by Spaniards, were nearly all destroyed. Last night minute guns had been fired since sunrise, in honor of the murdered liberators. The bodies of Col. Crittenden and Captain Victor Kerr, which have been brought here from Havana, attracted crowds of people and the sight produced deep feeling.

The military had been ordered out to suppress the riot. Three or four Spanish coffee houses had been destroyed.

The excitement against the Spanish Consul was chiefly by his refusal to deliver a number of letters from prisoners shot at Havana, which had been written just before their execution. The letters were forwarded to the Consul by the Cuban authorities; a committee waited upon him and requested a delivery of the letters, which he refused, but it was subsequently forced to surrender them.

The Cuban news had created the greatest excitement.

A fire occurred in Chicago on the 25th ult., destroying property to the amount of sixty thousand dollars.

Late and Important News From Cuba--Two More Battles Fought--Seventy Pesons Shot--Two Thousand Troops for Cuba.

The St. Louis Evening Intelligencer of the 3d, contains the following dispatches from its private correspondent:

First Dispatch.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 1st, 1851.

Capt. John E. Hyder, of the Cincinnati, who left Havana on the 25th, and has just arrived, reports that two more battles had been fought, in which General Enna, and two hundred other Spaniards were killed. General Enna, was buried at Havana with great pomp. Lopez's force had dispersed into the mountains. Seventy of his men who were left prisoners with the Spaniards, were shot as soon as taken. Very few Creoles were joining Lopez.

The accounts furnished by the Delta are much more favorable to Lopez.

The Alabama sails to-night for Cuba, with 1,000 liberators.

Second Dispatch.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 2d, 1851.

Three different accounts confirm the success of Lopez, and death of Gen. Enna.

Brig Cincinnati arrived at New Orleans on the 1st, from Havana, 25th ult. The Spanish accounts say that Lopez was surrounded by 4,000 of the Queen's troops, while contrary accounts say that Lopez had advanced to within thirty miles of Havana, having been joined by 4,000 Spanish soldiers—making all deductions. One thing is certain, that Lopez has not been defeated! The most reliable information confirms the advance of Lopez on Havana.

Third Dispatch.

The schooner Merchant arrived on Saturday, four days later from Havana, and confirms the previous accounts that Lopez had been victorious. Gen. Enna, Commander of the Spanish forces, was killed, and buried with great pomp.

Reports from Havana state that the Spanish loss was five hundred killed in battle.

The Merchant was not allowed to land, nor to take in cargo at Havana.

STILL LATER.

Lopez Captured and Executed.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 4th.

Lopez was captured and executed, at Havana, on the 30th. The revolution entirely suppressed. The Cherokee arrived at New Orleans yesterday, from Havana, and brought the news. We will get the particulars as soon as possible.

We have just been shown an ear or head of wheat, sent by the Governor of Utah Territory to our citizens, as a specimen of the growth in Salt Lake Valley. It is certainly a curiosity, being about two and a quarter inches in circumference, and four in length. The grains are much larger than those of the wheat grown in this country, and much better filled. It may be seen at the store of Messrs. J. W. & J. E. McIntosh.—Occidental Messenger.

Messrs. Heiskell & Hughes, of St. Louis, will please accept our thanks for St. Louis Price Current.

School District Number 1.

At a meeting of the citizens, of School District Number 1., held at the County Court House, August 14th, for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year; the following named persons were duly elected:

President—EVAN M. GREENE.
Secretary—GEORGE W. ARMSTRONG.
Treasurer—C. C. PENDLETON.

The above officers constitute the Board of Directors for the term for which they were elected.

Broken Open.

The Store of C. O. Meuster, was broken open last night, by some thief or theives, and robbed of some three hundred dollars worth of Goods; and we feel to say to those concerned in the robbery, that unless the Goods are restored to the owner, and full and fair satisfaction made therefor; that a sore and grievous curse shall rest upon them, in the name of the Lord, and they shall be known, and the people shall point the finger of scorn at them, and they shall become a hiss and a by-word among all people. Amen.

POETRY.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Below I give you for publication a copy of the lines composed by W. W. Phelps, whilst on a trip of exploration to Little Salt Lake, and as I have often been solicited for a copy, it may be interesting to your numerous readers. AMICUS.

Tune—A Life on the Ocean Wave.

A life on the desert Plains,
A home on the mountains breast,
Where the Savage freely reigns,
And the hell is further west.
Where the storm king rudely rides,
In his cloudy flying car
With his nimble windy guides,
O'er the snow cop'd mountains far.
A Life, &c.

Again how the Valley smiles,
The sky like a mirror seen,
And the spotted mountains wild,
In a world of evergreen;
Where the airy nations leap,
And the feathered gentry soar,
In the clear blue upper deep,
Where the rushing waters roar.
A Life, &c.

The rim where the mountains halt,
The space for the Basin State;
Was an ancient sea of salt,
When the Jaredites were great;
Where the pearls were rarely found,
As the oysters had to soar,
For the mighty waters round,
By the Lord were sent on shore.
A Life, &c.

The rocks and the gorgeous clouds,
Are still when the tempest reigns;
But they speak when the fire crowds,
As the cinders heap the plain;
Hyeroglyphics tell the tale
Of the ages gone before;
How the remnant had to wail,
When kingdoms are no more.
A Life, &c.

We're free on the desert lands;
We're free on the mountains round;
We're free to the precious sands,
Where the gifts of God abound,
But the best of all the earth,
An everlasting store,
O'celestial joys and worth,
When kingdoms are no more.
A Life, &c.

'Tis life on the desert lawn,
To camp in the open air,
When the day is nearly gone,
For the boys to fit their fare,
How the brush and water took,
And a thousand jolly jokes,
As the cakes and meat do cook,
And the saucy fire it smokes.
A life, &c.

'Tis life in a desert storm,
To sleep in the drifted snow,
With but little fire to warm,
And the winds unceasing blow,
Then our busy fancy paints,
The awful what's to come,
And dismissing all complaints,
What a blessed place is home.
A Life, &c.

'Tis life that the desert lends,
To think of the joys to come,
When we meet with our wives and friends,
As they greet us welcome home,
In that day of loving glee,
When their love is more and more,
And the spirits all agree;
Then we'll kiss them, o'er and o'er.
A Life, &c.

MISCELLANY.

For the Frontier Guardian.

A Jealous Man's Confession.

BY CHARLIE.

From my very birth I have been cursed with a jealous disposition; while I yet hung upon my mother's breast, the demon Distrust marked me for his own. And I have not been a tardy slave, but have with a willing subserviency followed my potent dictator.

I was the first-born of my fond parents, and with a doting anxiety they watched my early footsteps. I was the pride of my father, and was adored by my mother, but their united efforts to make me virtuous and happy were but ill repaid, and the bright hopes they had fondly cherished, of rearing a son to be a prop in their old age, and render their descent, down the declivity of life easy and light, were early blasted. They were as kind as parents could be. Aye, they were too kind, they humored me to excess; although they always acted, as they considered, in reference to my best good, they lived to learn that their kind endeavors were lavished on an ungrateful child.

Notwithstanding the many lessons of piety, early given me by my good parents, my first impressions little corresponded with those worthy precepts; but the evil hand of destiny that has in later years impelled me forward to crime unpardonable in this world, or the world to come, seemed also to guide my infant steps.

My selfish and jealous disposition, coupled with extreme cruelty, rendered me an object of aversion to all my youthful acquaintances. Whenever my mother chanced to pay the least attention to any of the neighbors' children or even pat the head of the little dog Frolic in a caressing manner, I imagined I was being robbed of my rightful dues. Such children as were thus caressed seldom escaped punishment, and as for poor Frolic, he was so cruelly beaten that he never visited the parlor, only in my absence, and would curl his tail between his legs and run yelping to the door, whenever I entered the room.

When I had nearly reached my fourth year, a little sister was added to the family. I very well remember the sensations produced upon me by the appearance of this little stranger; it seems to me but yesterday, that I was summoned to my mother's bed-room to see the little intruder. My mother addressed me kindly, and called me to her bedside. "My dear Frank," said she, and she reached out her pale hand and drew me nearer to her, and kissed my forehead. "Frank this is your little sister, is it not a pretty babe, how sweet she looks, you must love your little sister, Frank."

To these kind expressions I made no reply, but hung down my head and looked as sullen as though I had been called up to be chastized for a misdemeanor, rather than to be introduced to my young sister.

My mother very generously attributed my silence to my bashfulness, but she little knew what a storm of passion was raging in my jealous breast. I considered this little new comer a dangerous rival, and entertained serious fears that it might rob me of my place near the heart of my mother. I hurried from the room with every feeling of my jealous nature fully aroused; I sought the nurse and immediately interrogated her in reference to my rival, but I could learn nothing satisfactory from her. "I say nurse, where did mother get that little, ugly, squaling brat?" After a moment of hesitation, the kind old nurse smilingly replied; "that she found it in the garden, concealed under a cabbage leaf."

On hearing this, I went direct to the place where I kept my toys, and taking therefrom my hatchet, I immediately repaired to the garden and commenced diligent search for babies' nests among the cabbage. An Indian never hunted his victim with more stealth than I raised each leaf, and with ready hatchet watched for the appearance of the little ones; and had I discovered the object of my search, my keen-edged weapon would have done the work of death. Every cabbage in the garden was carefully examined before I abandoned the search, and fearing peradventure that one might have been overlooked, and to render the matter more sure, I cut every head from its stalk and threw them over the fence into the street; for this offence I was justly punished by my father, the first corporeal punishment I ever received from either of my parents.

Years passed away, and I remained the same jealous, cruel, and ungovernable Frank. My sister was just the reverse. Her's was a soft and gentle spirit, as pure as an angel, and breathed naught but virtue and innocence.

It is strange, 'tis singularly strange, that I did not profit by the worthy example of my good sister, but strange as it may seem, to my shame be it said, that her kindness to me made me angry with her; my harsh, cruel treatment towards her, she always repaid with kindness, this I thought she did to chide me and I was the more unkind.

When with a retrospective eye, I glance at the wicked path I have pursued with such eager steps, I am forced to the conclusion, that I am not possessed of a single redeeming quality, but seem to be urged forward by the unseen hand of fate, to everything that is mean or cruel, degrading or low.

At an early age my parents sent me to a boarding-school in a neighboring town: here I found new trials to encounter and new difficulties to overcome, incidents were of daily occurrence that roused my jealous nature to action. If any of my schoolmates was favorably noticed by my teacher or outstripped me in my studies, I was his sworn enemy, and resorted to every plan that my jealous imagination could invent to get him punished, and ruin him in the estimation of the teacher, my plans were so cunningly devised and so deeply laid, that I rarely missed my point.

Edwin May and myself were competitors for the head of our class, it was the last day of the quarter, and the one who stood at the head of the class at the close of the term was to receive a "reward of merit." Now I did not care a fig about a "reward of merit," but I could not bear the idea of being excelled. When we were called forward for a recitation, I stood at the head of the class and Edwin was next below me. I had studied my lesson with great care, and flattered myself that I had learned it perfectly. I retained my place till the last word which I unfortunately missed, Edwin immediately corrected me and exultingly passed above me. I almost burst with passion, and it was with much difficulty that I refrained from screaming aloud with anger, but with much exertion I succeeded in smothering my rage for the time being, and escaped without my emotions being discovered.

We had a vacation of one week, during which time I daily tasked my imagination to devise some plan to be revenged on Edwin. I was as cowardly as I was jealous and cruel, and though I was much stronger in body and limb than Edwin, and a year or two his senior, I lacked sufficient courage to attack him myself, so I falsely represented to the teacher that Edwin was guilty of theft, that he had stolen apples from a neighboring orchard; he believed my story, and the second day after the re-commencement of the school Edwin was called up to answer to the charge of stealing apples. The teacher told him as it was the first offence, if he would confess to the school and to the owner of the orchard, he would not punish him, this of course he refused to do, and the consequense was, he received a severe chastizment in presence of the whole school.

After this occurrence, Edwin, instead of being angry with me, was if possible, more kind to me than before; this was more than I could bear. I could sit and see him writhing under the lash with a sort of fiendish satisfaction, but to have good returned for evil in such a marked manner, was like heaping coals of fire on my head, I knew I had deeply wronged my friend, yet I lacked true moral courage, I had not magnanimity enough to ask his forgiveness, so ever afterwards I shunned him as much as possible.

I was a precocious youth, and when I had reached the age of twelve or thirteen years, I considered myself almost a man. I had formed an interesting acquaintance with several pretty girls, and with a characteristic vanity flattered myself, that I was dearly beloved by them all, and it annoyed me very much whenever they received the slightest attention from any of my schoolmates. But I remained a favorite of the fair ones only for a short time. As soon as they discovered, that under a fair exterior was concealed such a distrustful spirit, such a jealous disposition, I was dismissed from their company.

Jane Logan was the last to cut my acquaintance, she was a beautiful, dark haired, bright eyed girl of thirteen, with a gentle spirit and a sweet disposition, with her usual frankness she informed that my company was no longer agreeable. When I was dismissed by the other girls I cared but little about it, I flattered myself that Jane loved me more than all the rest and this belief fully compensated me for the loss, but when I was forsaken by her in whom I had centered all my affections, she whom I esteemed above all others, (except myself,) I was angry; I was not angry with Jane, but with myself, that I had forfeited the esteem of so lovely a being by manifesting a selfish and jealous disposition.

I was now sixteen, and my besetting sin, instead of decreasing with maturer years, rather increased, and my conduct became so intolerable, that even my parents would put up with it no longer, my father plainly told me, that unless there was a reformation in my character, I could no longer have a home in his house. He talked to me kindly, and pointed out the evils of the course I was pursuing, and with tears in his eyes, exhorted me to abandon it, but my bosom was callous, and this kind reproof of my worthy sire I very ungenerously construed to harshness and a desire to persecute me. I thought I was greatly abused, and at once made up my mind to leave my father's house. The suggestion pleased me, and I made preparations for immediate departure. My good mother and kind sister entreated me to stay with them, but it was of no use. My well packed trunk already stood by the hall door awaiting the arrival of the stage. My father endeavored to appear indifferent, yet, as the stage rolled up to the door, I discovered an air of uneasiness resting upon his brow indicating that all was not right within. I handed my trunk to the driver, bowed to my father, bade my mother and sister a cold farewell, bounded into the stage and turned my back upon the home of my youth, forever.

After two weeks tedious travel by land and water, I arrived at a pleasant little village in the valley of the Mississippi. My small stock of money with which I left home was now nearly exhausted, and I was obliged to seek some employment to earn a maintenance. On making enquiry of my landlord, I learned that the trustees of the village school wished to procure a teacher I immediately sought an interview and informed them that I was from the State of New York, (the only recommend necessary,) acquainted them with my terms. All was satisfactory, and the next week I was regularly installed Village Schoolmaster. Although this was my first attempt as a pedegogue, I had a good school and gave general satisfaction.

Among my larger female pupils was one Julia McMinn, an interesting young lady of about my own age. With Miss Julia I was favorably impressed at first sight, and soon began to admire her, she was so modest and unassuming in her manners, and possessed such an aimiable disposition, and such a beautiful figure, such lovely features; her light brown hair which was always neatly arranged, hung in glossy natural curls about her neck of snowy white. Her eyes were unlike those of the olive colored creole of the sunny south, neither can they be described as like those of the pale faced maiden of the north, they were neither black nor blue, nor yet a hazel, but of a soft and dewy lustre ordinarily indicating nothing but love, deep unchanging love, but when she was in the least excited they would sparkle with animation. Her mouth was small and delicate, her lips were indeed models, her figure was tall and graceful, and her appearance altogether calculated to inspire the beholder with admiration.

The interest with which I first beheld Miss Julia soon ripened into affection, deep and ardent. My love was warmly reciprocated, and I became suitor for her hand

Mr. McMinn was a native of Ireland, he was educated for the Catholic priesthood, but as he was about to enter upon his ministerial duties, he fell in love with a "fair daughter of Erin." As celibacy is strictly enjoined upon her priests, by a law of the church Mr. McMinn had either to give up the ministry or abandon his "lady love." After weighing the matter he decided to adopt the former course. Notwithstanding the stern opposition of his offended father, he married, and soon after emigrated to America with his young and amiable wife. He settled in the "far west," which was then a wilderness, became a merchant and grew up with the country. At the time I made his acquaintance, he had quit the trade, and retired on his ample fortune.

Julia was the only daughter, and it was with no small degree of parental pride that the old man saw her fast ripening into graceful womanhood.

I have said, I was suitor for the hand of Julia. Well, I gained my suit and Julia became my wife, and my happiness was complete. Since I had left my father's house, I had very well succeeded in concealing my damning passion. A year had passed since our marriage, one of uninterrupted bliss. All was bright and pleasant, not a single cloud of sorrow had appeared above the horizen of our conjugal heaven.

My dear Julia, said I one morning as we rose from the breakfast table, a year has passed since our marriage, and I have not been from your side a single hour since that time; to-day I have some business in the country which may detain me till evening, you must pass the time as agreeably as you can until I return. She followed me to the door and imprinted a kiss on my cheek. Good bye, said she, you must return as early as you can, for I shall be very lonely.

I did return, and an hour or two earlier than I expected; it seemed as though I had been absent a week—I wondered why Julia was not at the door to greet me, she certainly must have heard the carriage as its wheels rolled over the gravelly road. I ran into the house but I saw her not. She must be unwell and has retired to her bedroom. The next moment I was in her room but Julia was not there. A vague suspicion flashed across my mind but was instantly banished. I rushed wildly from the house, and ran into the garden—I visited every spot where she and I were wont to wander, but I found her not. I hastened through a long unfrequented aisle in the lower part of the garden. Hark! I hear a voice! I paused, and listened, it was Julia's voice. I advanced a little nearer, and again stopped and listened. Ye Gods! what language saluted my ear! to whom could it be addsessed. "Harry" said she, addressing some person I could not see (they were concealed by the thick foliage.) "this is one of the happiest days of my life—I am so glad that you have returned. I was afraid I should never see you again, it a'most broke my poor heart when you left us, but you have now returned I shall love you more than ever." I carefully approached the spot, and noiselessly parted the foliage I saw, —Great God! what a sight! There sat my Julia on a rustic seat, beside him to whom she had addressed herself in words that pierced my very soul like so many daggers. He was a tall, handsome, young man, with a heavy moustache, and features somewhat embrowned by exposure to the sun. He sat with his arm lovingly extended around Julia's waist; she looked up into his face and smiled so sweetly. He pressed her to his bosom and kissed her blushing cheek.

I felt a strange kind of dizziness stealing over me. I instinctively felt for my knife—I clinched its handle with a firm grasp—my brain was on fire—a fierce flame was consuming me. Every feeling of my jealous nature which had so long remained dormant, was fully roused. I rushed into the arbor, with my dagger uplifted, and seized the terrified Julia by the hair. I drew her from the arms of the stranger, and dashed her violently to the ground. I cried, "die thou damned traitoress," and plunged my dagger full to the hilt in her snowy bosom. She exclaimed, O! Frank; O! my brother, and died. The truth flashed at once upon my mind, and I fell insensibly across the body of my murdered wife.

Returning consciousness found me incarcerated in this narrow, gloomy cell.

Once or twice since my acquaintance with Julia I had heard her mention something of a brother, who had been absent many years, and supposed to be dead. He sailed for New Orleans on board a steamer and had never been heard of after. It was supposed that he had fallen over-board and was drowned. He very unexpectedly returned, and you have learned the result. I have been tried for murder, I plead guilty to the charge, received the sentence of the law, and am now awaiting my execution.

I willingly give my life to atone for the murderous deed, but if I had a thousand lives to lose, they all would not atone for a single drop of the blood of the faithful and virtuous Julia. I expect no mercy either in this world or the world to come. "No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him," and I am a murderer of the darkest, foulest kind. I have murdered my wife my fond devoted Julia. The same hand that wielded the murderous weapon, and felt the warm blood as it gushed from the fatal wound, has written this confession.

I can write no more; the executioner is at the door, and I must prepare for the scaffold.

May this history of my career prove a warning to all those, that, like me are born with a jealous disposition. May they learn to curb their passions in their youth, and it may save them an eternity of misery.

Italy.

The Pope and the King of Naples.

It is stated in letters from Rome that the Pope does not intend to return to his capital from Castel Gandolfo, where he had gone at the last accounts, unless he should have some better guarantee against revolution than the presence of a French army. At Castel Gandolfo he has always the means of escape, for in a few hours he would be under the protection of the Neapolitans. The King of Naples has visited him at Castel Gandolfo, and they had a long and secret interview.

The Concordat between the Pope and the Grand Duke of Tuscany is published in the Florence journals. It is remarkable chiefly for the abrogation of many of the guarantees against the excessive power of the clergy which were introduced by Leopold.

Austria.—The Austrian Government is proceeding very mildly against the Hungarians, says the London Globe. The sentence against Col. Cusha, who commanded the fortress of Peterwarden as insurgent general, has been published, and merely condems him to dismisal from the service, without further punishment.—[Intelligencer.

From the Occidental Messenger.

From Our Deseret Correspondence.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
July 31st, 1851.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Having been requested by one of your correspondents to address a few lines to you, I cheerfully comply: and will commence by giving you an account of the proceedings of the 4th of July.

At day-break, I was awakened from my slumbers by the firing of artillery. Daylight stole slowly over the peaceful Valley of the Great Salt Lake. I arose from my bed, and went upon the hill-side near to the Governor's house, where I had a good view of the City. The Cannon after firing from its station, (the Temple Block,) received a compliment in return from the Black Rock:—all there seemed to be busy in lighting fires, milking their cows, watering their horses, &c., &c. At eight o'clock, again the Old Lady roared through the Valley and summoned the people together. There was heard the sound of horses' hoofs, and the rumbling of carriage wheels. I hastened to the house where I resided, and in twenty minutes joined the party. They where organized by the Marshall, Horace S. Eldridge. In the front of the party were an escort of about twenty of the principal officers of the Legion; next the Nauvoo Brass Band, in a carriage which they had built for their own accommodation; it will hold about forty musicians very comfortably, the carriage is about thirty feet long inside, with wheels 9 feet 6 inches apart, and was drawn by sixteen beautiful mules! Next Governor Young and family, and Heber C. Kimball and family. Those gentlemen who did not belong to the Church, and strangers, were invited to fall in next to them. The High Council and other officers, according to their standing, followed, till the party was made up. The carriages including a few wagons, numbered a hundred and thirty. The train having arrived to start, again was heard the voice of thunder from the cannon's mouth, rumbling along the mountain till it was lost in the distance. No sooner had it died away than a voice was heard from Black Rock, telling the happy Saints that all was ready to receive them. The word being given, the two young gentlemen who drove the mammoth carriage, cracked their whips, and, in spite of my unbelief, the mules started and kept up a good round trot, so that I believe no one wished to pass by, even if they could. It was a beautiful morning. Before leaving the west part of the City, we passed a company of men mounted and equipped. On inquiring, I found that they were appointed to guard the City in the absence of its inmates. On we went, the wind blowing lightly from the north, (we were traveling due west,) which made it very comfortable on account of dust. We troted along, once in a while being entertained by the musicians with marches, waltzes and quicksteps, till we had almost forgotten that we were traveling when we were near our journey's end. The company that was stationed at the Black Rock, had raised a splendid liberty pole, at the top of which floated a flag that would have been no disgrace to New York, or any of our eastern cities. Here was stationed a very fine pup, which I think, belonged to the old lady before referred to; judging from their looks, I should think they were of the English Bull breed, they were so strong about the jaw; but, be that as it may, the pup barked well, and loud enough to make them hear it at Great Salt Lake City, a distance of twenty-two miles, and informed them that the company had arrived at their journey's end, having accomplished the trip in about four hours—The coral being formed, the horses and mules being unharnessed and given into the hands of the guard, they were driven out to a good grazing place about two miles from camp.

Next was a beautiful scene to the eye, but more particularly to the taste; for it was not long before all the ivories in camp were engaged in masticating the heterogeneous mass of eatables, prepared by the hands of the mothers and daughters of Zion. Another luxury which added joy to the taste, it being very hot, was snow from the top of the mountain, which caused the soul to burst forth in the language of the poet.

"Sparkling and bright in its liquid light.
Is the water in our glasses."

Again the dog barked, and the people assembled around the ponderous Band Carriage, and the orators and nobility of Deseret seated themselves within. The speeches and orations were such, as not only breathed forth the spirit of '76, but characterized a noble people, rising in the scale of National importance. Among other noted characters in the Band Carriage, was the beloved President of the Mormon Church and Governor of Utah, with his noble friend and counsellor Heber C. Kimball by his side; and, judging from the walk and conversation of these two noble chieftains, we might say in truth, that David and Jonathan never loved better. Among the speakers, were the Mayor of the City, J. M. Grant, and Orson Spencer, Chancellor of the Deseret University. Some excellent toasts were offered by 'General Wells, Judge Phelps and others. What added greatly to the interest of the occasion, was the time occupied in bathing in the Great Salt Lake. I here stop to make a remark on this wonderful natural curiosity.

The Mormon people, ever ready to take advantage of improvement by the public spirit, with which they seem to be inspired, intend building a Bath-house and Hotel, together with their pleasure boats, which will make Great Salt Lake one of the greatest places of resort, not only to the citizens of the Mormon population, but a pleasurable excursion to the passing emigrants. The day being far spent, the people again refreshed themselves and prepared to join in the recreations of the evening. It was not long after, while passing by the spacious pavilion, my ears were saluted by the well known sound of "balance all!" At ten o'clock, the scene was changed by the sound of the bugle. One peculiarity of the Mormon people, is there tenacity for mixing their devotional exercises with their amusements and festivities. The bugle was the announcement to assemble the people together for evening prayers, when the greater portion of the people retired to rest.

The morning of the 5th, the sun arose in its usual splendor; the fires were again lighted around the coral, and the ladies were busy in attending to their domestic, though Camp-like duties. Again the musicians played some favorite airs, which was the signal for another change of scenery. An hour was spent listening to the soul-cheering songs of the amatuers of Deseret, causing a merry sound of laughter from the assembled crowd. The Marshal of the day announced the time for the Cavalcade to prepare to return to the City. In twenty minutes every horse and mule was harnessed. The procession was formed, and the roaring artillery gave the command to march. Again echoed the rich tones of the music among the lofty peaks of the mountains, in our progress to the City. On our arrival, the City poured out her numerous sons and daughters to welcome our return, amid the firing of artillery and the acclamations of the people. And the multitude returned to their respective homes. Thus passed a day in Salt Lake Valley, where, four years since, nothing could be heard but the war-whoop of the wild savage, the howl of the wolf, the croaking of the raven, and the chirping of the cricket. Thus ended a day of pure patriotism unalloyed by any broil or accident, save the upsetting of Mr. Holladay's carriage: the gentleman himself received no serious injury, and the only damage sustained was the loss of a few sea stores.

Having given you a description of our Fourth of July, I shall now attempt to give you some particulars as they transpired on the evening of the 23d:

During the day, my attention was called to a placard issued by the "Deseret Amateur Association," announcing a miscellaneous Concert. I was not long in making up my mind to pay them a visit. At half past 7 o'clock, the bell rang, and the house being called to order, prayer was offered up by the chaplain, Elder Fugum, which, perhaps, to your readers, may assume a new feature in the history of the drama, but forms an essential item in the Mormon creed, which is, to acknowledge the hand of the Lord in all things. The spacious bowery, capable of holding two thousand persons, was filled to overflowing with a very respectable audience. The first part of the time was occupied with vocal and instrumental music: the songs were composed principally by the celebrated Brayan, Machan, Russell, and others, and came off with considerable eclat. Deseret can boast of as good singers as any of our eastern States. The Nauvoo Brass Band is composed of about thirty members, under the command of Captain Pitt, and can produce and perform the best military and concert compositions of the day, and display a signal talent in music as in singing. The second part of the performance was taken up in the performance of the celebrated Melo Drama "Robert Macaire;" showing the genius and desire of the Deseretians to attain to the perfections of the histrionic art; to which end they design erecting a splendid theatre. To say the least, the performance went off with great applause. The Chaplain dismissed the audience and all retired in peace.

The 24th being a day annually set apart to commemorate the entrance of the Mormon pioneers into the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, is devoted to festivities commensurate to this memorable occasion. At day-break, the inhabitants were aroused from their slumbers by the salutations of the thundering orator, and the serenading of the Brass Band. At 8 o'clock the people assembled together to form the escort:

First, the military and martial music, then followed the Pioneers, each carrying emblems significant of the productions, manufacture, wealth and resources of the Salt Lake Valley: Next the Chancellor of the University, and its twelve Regents, Secretary and Treasurer; then followed the twenty-four Fathers, and twenty-four Mothers in Israel; then twenty-four young gentlemen, and twenty-four young ladies, twenty-four boys and twenty-four girls. At the head of each company was borne a splendid banner, inscribed with a suitable motto. Then followed the escorted party, viz: Governor Young, with his Counsellors Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards, and the venerable Patriarch of the Church, John Smith, accompanied by the newly appointed Government officers of the Territory, viz: Secretary Harris, Chief Justice Brandenburg, Assistant Justice, Z. Snow, Messrs. Rose & Day, Indian Agents, J. M Bernhisel, Agent for Utah, and the Hon. A. W. Babbitt. In the rear came the twenty-four Bishops of the twenty-four wards of the City, with G. D. Grant and William H. Kimball, Marshalls of the Day. The procession moved off in state from the Governor's House to the Bowery. The day was entirely taken up with speeches and orations from the several orators appointed. Songs were composed for, and sung on the occasion, accompanied with suitable music; numbers of excellent toasts were delivered and the Band sent forth their thrilling strains. The whole was a scene of the bursting forth of patriot hearts rejoicing in liberties of a once fallen and persecuted people, now rising like a Phœnix from the ashes of past oppression, on the wings of time to the acme of National Independence and constitutional rights, unfurling to the States and the world, the banner of freedom, and causing to shine on the Rocky Mountains, a beacon, exhibiting to the nations of the earth an intelligent and civilized people, capable of self-government. The citizens prepared on the occasion the luxuries and best table comforts the Valley could afford. The various settlements poured into the City, and the beauty and fashion of the eastern world seemed to have been assembled here. The greatest order and harmony prevailed, unalloyed by any unhallowed mirth or drunken revelry, without accident or ought to mar the interest of the day. By polite invitation from the Captain of the Band, I was kindly solicited to attend a Ball which came off on the same evening. The ladies shone forth in all their lovliness, and the gallant gentry were not deficient in courtesy. Over one hundred couple were well entertained in the brilliantly lighted Hall of the "Lord's Store-house." The Mormon people seem to display great taste and exquisite enjoyment in a Ball-room, for though they kept up the dance till late at night, no sett of coullions were repeated. Here might be seen the aged father and the mature matron, the sprightly youth and the lovely daughter, equally inspired with holiest joys mingling together in their liveliest rounds of the circle of happy spirits, which gave me a degree of pleasure I scarcely ever experienced. The quadrille Band consisted of first and second violin, violincello, flute and clarionet, which added greatly to the hilarity of the scene. To sum up all, if ice creams and ice cakes, chickens and chicken fixings add anything to the enjoyment, and feast the appetite, here was profusion of the luxuries of life in all its variety.

Thus ended the birth-day of the civil, social, religious and political being of this community in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.

Sacrifices Among Various Nations.

The custom of sacrifices has existed in almost every nation since its establishment as a divine institution. But as the knowledge of the true God became supplanted by dreams of deities, the personifications of human vices, the sacrifices of brute animals, as ordained by Divine Wisdom were either forgotten or considered insufficeint to gain the favor or appease the wrath of the new deities, and man was made the more acceptable victim. In times of public calamity the princes of Phoenicia offered up their dearest offspring to the avenging deities. The Ethiopians sacrificed boys to the sun and girls to the moon. The Scythians performed their rites in gloomy groves, the oaktrees of which were sprinkled with the blood of every hundredth prisoner. Red-haired men were sacrificed at the tombs of Osiris by the Egyptians; and they were accustomed, it is said, to throw a young and beautiful virgin into the Nile. Human victims were immolated in Persia by the sword, or burying alive. In the heart of a wood, the Druids sacrificed their captives, and in Gaul they set up an immense figure of basket-work in the shape of a man, in which a hundred victims were at once burned alive. The Greek States, in the heroic age, offered sacrifices before their troops set forth on an expedition. A man was sacrificed every year by the Athenians; and this custom existed among the Romans even after it was forbidden by law, and scarcely ceased before the downfall of paganism. It existed amongst Goths and the Arabians, and was practiced with peculiar attrocities by the Carthagenians. Among the northern tribes of Europe it prevailed until the advent of Christianity. The Mahrattas fatten for the altar victims remarkable for their bloom and beauty. At the burial of Congo and Ashantee princes, hundreds of their wives and attendants, have been destroyed. The Peruvians when they offered solemn prayers for their princes, slew children in great companies. But in Mexico, human sacrifice was carried on to an awful extent. In the city of Mexico alone the yearly victims were estimated at twenty thousand; and the altars of slaughter arose in the other cities of the empire. Seventy thousand human beings are said to have perished at the dedication of one great temple. The skulls of such sufferers were not unfrequently used in building certain edifices. One of these noticed by the companions of Cortez, and which consisted of a central tower and enclosing wall, formed wholly of skulls, is said to have contained at least one hundred and thirty-six thousand of these relics of pagan cruelty. Stretched on a block of stone, the Mexican victim was held fast by several priests, while one in a scarlet mantle, opened his breast with a knife, tore out the heart, held it towards the sun, and then threw it at the feet of the idol. Previous to the sacrifice the victim had been splendidly arrayed, and every luxury heaped upon him. In Mexico, as often elsewhere, the sacrifice was associated with cannibalism.

DELICIOUS MADNESS.—Going crazy after calico. Its premonitory symptoms are standing collars and passionate desire to blow the bowels out of a flute.

PROPERTY.—Property left to a child may soon be lost; but the inheritance of virtue—a good name, an unblemished reputation—will abide for ever. If those who are toiling for wealth to leave their children, would take half the pains to secure for them virtuous habits, how much more serviceable would they be. The largest property may be wrested from a child, but virtue will stand by him to the last.

Mission to the East Indies.

Doubt and uncertainty to a greater or less extent attend the execution of the devices of man in all the walks of life, but when the commandment of God goes forth, and his own appointed servants arise in the strength of that name through which they are called, to perform those things which are required at their hands; then, an unerring certainty attends their movements; then, the Angels of God—the holy Priesthood of heaven, are moved to secure the accomplishment of the required purpose, the obedience to the holy commandments. It is a high and holy obligation imposed upon the Twelve Apostles of this dispensation, to see that the Gospel is sent forth into all the world as fast as the Lord shall open the way, and the urgency of this mission is more imperatively felt by the promise that the Lord will cut his work short in righteousness, and that a consumption is decreed to take effect upon all the earth.

We rejoice that the spirit of his calling rests so eminently upon Elder Lorenzo Snow, that he purposes to unfurl the banner of the everlasting Gospel in the East Indies, and rally Israel—the elect of God,—to its maintenance and defence in those sunny climes. God speed the mighty undertaking, and add every blessing needful for its accomplishment.

The Gospel once established in Culcutta or Bombay, with Elders P. P. Pratt, Hiram Clarke, Addison Pratt, and their fellow laborers in the Society and Sandwich Islands; also a settlement on the western coast of California, under the guidance of Elders A. Lyman and C. C. Rich; churches will then be established almost within hailing distance around the Globe. We understand brother Snow intends returning to America eastward, through the Pacific Ocean and California, that he intends leaving England immediately after the book of Mormon is in Italian print, which we are informed progresses favorably. Who, that have the means will step forward and render brother Snow the necessary aid to accomplish this important mission? The blessings of a righteous host shall rest upon them, and all that is theirs.

Watermelon Sugar is a new article. The Chicago Tribune acknowledges the receipt of a small quantity of the article, and says:

We have seen and used sugar made from cane, maple, corn, and beets, but we have never seen any so pure and deliciously sweet as this. To our mind it is equal to the best quality of honey. The watermelon possesses a great amount of sacharine matter in a very pure state, and we do not see why making sugar from it could not be made a profitable business in a climate adapted to the growth of it.

Singular Geological Fact.

At Modena, in Italy, within a circle of four miles around the city, wherever the earth is dug, and the workmen arrive at the distance of 63 feet, they come to a bed of chalk, which they bore with an auger five feet deep. They withdraw from the pit before the auger is removed, and upon its extraction the water bursts up with great violence, and quickly fills the well thus made, the supply of water being affected neither by rains nor droughts. At the depth of 14 feet are found the ruins of an ancient city, houses, paved streets, and Mosaic work. Below this, again, is a layer of earth, and at 26 feet walnut trees are found entire, and with leaves and walnuts still upon them. At 28 feet soft chalk is found, and below this, vegetables and trees as before.

No Enjoyment from Ill-Gotten Wealth.

If a man is a fool to expect wealth by dishonest means, he is a greater fool if he expects that wealth so acquired will afford him any enjoyment. Enjoyment did I say? Is it impossible that, in such a case, any man can expect enjoyment? What! enjoyment for you—you who have attained wealth by falsehood—by deception—by extortion—by oppression—you expect enjoyment—Listen, listen to the hearty denunciations of all honest men; to the awful imprecations of those who are injured; to the reproaches of your family whose name you have dishonored; to the accusations of that conscience whose voice you have stifled; and to the awful thunder of that heaven whose laws you have outraged! Listen to these—these are the enjoyments that will attend your ill-gotten wealth. "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days; and at his end shall be a fool"

A Happy World.

This is a happy world—who says to the contrary is a fool or something else. There is every thing to make us happy. The land, sea, and sky contribute to our enjoyment. The man who has a good heart sees pleasure where a bad person beholds nothing but gloom. The secret, then, of being happy and enjoying this glorious world, is to possess a virtuous heart. Who is the most cheerful and contented man in your neighborhood? The man who is most honored and possesses the greatest riches? No. It is he who has nothing but a kind heart. Nothing ruffles his temper or disturbs his repose. The morning sky—the evening cloud—the rolling waters—the blooming landscape—the teeming forest and the fields of snow, give him a pleasure that others never dreamt of. It is he whose mind is led from nature up to nature's God—and every day that he lives he is contented and happy as it is possible for a man to be. Depend upon it, the world is a beautiful one, and contains a thousand sources of enjoyment, which they only can see and feel whose hearts are pure, and whose lives correspond with the word of eternal truth.

The Prosperity of the Swiss and Italian Missions,—and Elder L. Snow's Mission to India—Call for Aid.

PRESIDENT F. D. RICHARDS,—I take the present occasion to communicate, through the columns of the Star, a few items of information to the Saints generally, in reference to the progress of the Italian and Swiss Missions, and other matters connected with the growing interests of Messiah's Kingdom.

Elder Stenhouse, with his wife and little daughter, will leave here this week to resume his labors in Switzerland. I have about completed the translation of "Divine Authority," and given Elder Stenhouse instructions to publish it immediately, together with a second edition of the "Voice of Joseph." We hope ere long to be able to issue a periodical from Geneva, adapted to our readers both in Switzerland and Italy. A general feeling of interest, in reference to our principles, has been awakened, and already some have yielded obedience to the truth. I feel assured that under the wise and spirited superintendency of Elder Stenhouse a great and mighty work will be done among that interesting people, and like all other virtuous and honorable spirits, when truth has been known and recived, no opposition, however severe, will make them swerve from the path of truth, or extinguish the lamp lit up in their understanding.

The Mission to Italy still moves forward under the cautious, prudent, faithful, and persevering labors and management of Elder Woodward. The two publications which I issued at Turin, are now circulated quite extensively in the north of Italy. Elder Toronto has returned from Sicily, and is now laboring with Elder Woodward very successfully. Through the united exertions of these faithful brethren, the interests of the work will continue to advance. Several intelligent and influential Italians have lately been ordained to the priesthood, and are now engaged in propagating the principles of life and salvation. Though the church is yet but in its infantile state, numbering some thirty members, it is costantly rising, and in spite of all opposition, will pass on to a state of manhood.

I am getting forward very well with the translation of the "Book of Mormon." I shall commence with the printing shortly, and will soon be able to present it to the people of Italy in their own language.

Lately my mind has been greatly impressed with the idea of introducing the Gospel to India. I have counselled with my brethren of the Twelve on the subject matter, and we all feel alike the importance of such a step, and the ultimate benefits of the kingdom of God. Upon the Twelve devolves the responsibility of introducing the Gospel to the nations. As the time approaches when we anticipate the privilage of returning to the body of the church, I feel reluctant indeed to suffer any favorable opportunity to pass of introducing the Gospel to India. Though the duties for Italy and Switzerland, and long absence from my family press heavily upon me, I am nevertheless ready in the name of the Lord to take upon me this work also.

I contemplate sending immediately around by sea to Calcutta some one or two good and faithful elders, and follow on myself as soon as I shall have completed the translation of the "Book of Mormon." I intend passing through by way of Switzerland and Italy, visiting the Saints in those countries, and promoting the interests of those Missions in any way that may lie in my power.

Circumstances may seem to be opening favorably in behalf of this mission. A short time since I met with a brother who had resided seven years in India, and is conversant with the native language, and will immediately enter upon the translation of some of my works, which I intend getting published there, together with the "Voice of Joseph" in English, as soon as I shall have arrived.

Brethren who have plenty of means and wish to employ them to the glory of God, and establishing and building up of His Kingdom, I trust will not be backward in liberality, that while I willingly and freely sacrifice the pleasures and endearments of home and friends, they may be equally ready and willing to sacrifice their means, and thus fulfill the scriptures in making to themselves friends with the mammon of unrighteousness.

Any of the Saints who have friends in that country, to whom the brethren may be introduced, let them send unsealed letters of commendation, properly addressed, enclosed in an envelope, addressed to me at 35, Jewin Street, City, London.

Yours affectionately,
LORENZO SNOW.

A Superior Woman.

A truly superior woman is she who knows enough never to ask a ridiculous or mistimed question, and who never obstinately opposes sensible men; such a woman knows how to keep silence, especially with the fools whom she might rally, and with the ignorant whom she might humiliate; she is indulgent to absurdities, because she does not care to show her learning, and is attentive to what is good, because she seeks instruction. Her great desire is, to understand, and not to teach; her great art (since it is acknowledged that there is art in the interchange of words) is, not to bring two proud antagonists together, eager to display their skill, and to amuse the company, each maintaining a proposition whose solution no one cares to arrive at; but to throw light upon all useful discussion, by encouraging those to take part in it who have something to say worth hearing.

Loyalty.

We have noticed for some time past, by various articles that appeared through newspaper columns, that several of the SANCTUM GENTRY, have been eagerly engaged to calumniate the social and political character of the Saints in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, with the view of retarding their progress, and spreading an unfavorable influence abroad in the different localities, where their periodicals have a circulation. Zeal may have done it; but we pronounce it a zeal not according to knowledge. Anything for the Press to raise an excitement, favorable, or unfavorable, good or bad, appear to us to be the creed of some of the gentlemen who occupy the tripod, and wield the quill.

Among the many foul and false charges, that have been preferred by persons of little, or no character, against the Mormons; disloyalty to the Government under which we live, appear very conspicuous. To controvert this, and several other charges, we refer our readers to a letter that appeared in the "Occidental Messenger," of the 12th ult., which may be found on our first page. The writer of that letter does not belong to our Church; therefore we presume that some of our readers, who are no doubt similarly placed, may consider it a production worthy of their perusal.

The reason why so many fictitious letters, have of late appeared through the Press, relative to the asserted misdemeanors of the Mormons in Great Salt Lake Valley, we can easily account for.

For the last two or three years, a heavy tide of emigration set in for the West, and carried with it, not only some of the noblest, brightest, and most enterprizing spirits of the age; but also through the concatenation of events, carried on its bosom some of the meanest spirits that ever tabernacled in mortal flesh. The latter like so much filthy floating matter, sometimes drifted from the main channel, and lodged on the banks, and in eddies, and from what we have learned, several of this class remained at Salt Lake last Winter. Being unwilling to work or starve, they pilfered and stole from the citizens in the Valley, cattle, horses, and other articles to subsist on. The people there, upon finding out their unlawful proceedings, brought the depredators to justice, and as far as we can learn sentenced the guilty parties to hard labor on the roads, &c. We understand that some of these were released last Spring, and as a consequent occurrence, they left with no good feeling toward the inhabitants of the Valley, and gave free vent to their spleen and corruption, for revenge, by writing to the States, the awful state of degeneracy into which the Mormons at Salt Lake had fallen; from which state the Government must retrieve them. Not contented with trifles, they thought that raising the cry of DISLOYALTY TO THE GOVERNMENT, would raise the indignation of the citizens of the several States, and make it bear detrimentally on the future prospects of fair Utah. After all, what have they done? What will their venom accomplish? All things are working together for good, and bringing from obscurity to notoriety and clearness, the character of a people, which is plainly portrayed in part, in the letter adverted to in the preceding part of this article. That is not all! our readers will find in one of our columns this issue, an account of the manner in which the Fourth of July was celebrated in Utah. Nothing treasonable there! Nothing but the best of feelings and sentiment, expressed toward the Government; and we are fully persuaded that every man and woman, who will read the proceedings of that day as observed in Utah, must feel convinced that the loyalty and good order of the people in that remote region, cannot be excelled in the States; although seperated from the rest of mankind, by snow-capped mountains and everlasting hills, on the right and on the left.

Time and consequent circumstances, will yet produce evidence sufficient to show that the Mormons are not that wicked, profligate, debased, degenerate, and ignorant class of people, that vicious and unprincipled men, would-have-them-to-be. The annals of their past history, only furnish series of troubles and vexations of a very peculiar character, which they have had to pass through in consequence of the strong tide of prejudice usually prevalent among mankind, at the appearance of anything that supersedes their present comprehension or understanding. Mothers, ignorance and mystery, have ruled the world about long enough, and it is now high time that their bigoted votaries should be liberated from worshipping any longer at their shrine. For this purpose lights came into the world, but we are sorry to say, that even now, some men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.

Etoile Du Deseret.

ORGANE DE L'EGLISE DE JESUS-CHRIST DES SAINTS-DES-DERNIERS-JOURS.

By the last Mail from the East, we received the third number of the above named periodical. It is published in the French language, at Paris, and edited by the well known, and talented writer, Elder John Taylor, President of the French Mission, from Great Salt Lake, Utah, in behalf of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. From our personal acquaintance with the Editor, we are certain that his Journal must be a welcome visitor to all lovers of truth, and to the French Saints in particular. We give the STAR OF DESERET a fixed place among our numerous list of exchanges; and wish it, and its faithful Editor, God speed.

Emigration.

Of late, we are in receipt of letters from almost every State in the Union; these letters are from various persons belonging to the Church, and others who do not; asking information relative to the best course for them to pursue, so as to be able to leave this Frontier next Spring, for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, California, and Oregon.

Our President here, and much respected SENIOR, (Elder Hyde,) being absent, we are to a certain extent at a loss, what to advance relative to the multifarious interrogations these letters contain. Mr. Hyde will soon be here himself, and give such counsel and instruction through the columns of the Guardian, as will no doubt suit the case of every one that has heretofore applied. His object for leaving this place last Spring, and prosecuting a journey across the plains, was with the view of ascertaining from the combined wisdom of the authorities of the Church at Salt Lake, the best possible manner to regulate Church matters in the States, and facilitate the progress of emigration to that place; in other words, to sit in council with the First Presidency of the Church in the Valley, and be the honored instrument of bearing the result of their united deliberations to the Saints in Pottawatamie — throughout the States, Canada, &c., &c.

In the meantime the Saints would do well, to be up and doing while it is called to-day, and prepare beforehand articles necessary for the trip. A little forethought or pre-meditation has often proved a bulwark against many inconveniences and trouble, incidental to a journey across the western prairies and plains: therefore, it becomes the duty of the Saints, to be wise as children of the light, and not encumber themselves with goods and chattels which perhaps will not either benefit themselves, or any other person, who may perchance buy them. We have reference more particularly to our brethren abroad, who intend emigrating by this place! Last season, several very good brethren to all external appearance, were detained in Pottawatamie, that might have gone to the Valley, were it not for this growing evil; its origin must arise from ignorance, or covetousness; when the latter predominates, gain is the object, more than anything else; therefore, we caution the Saints against this practice, because it leads to loss, trouble, vexation, disappointment, and sometimes apostacy.

We have been informed from a reliable source that Major Wharton, Commandant at Fort Kearney, with a number of the troops stationed at the Fort, recovered all the property stolen by the Pawnee Indians, from Elder Hyde and Company, in the Sand Hills. We are glad to see the timely interference of the Government Officers in this affair, and we understand that the Major had to bring his Cannon in sight, before these Red Skins would consent to surrender any of the stolen property; but it is said, that before he get through with them, that they had to hand over even to pocket handkerchiefs that were taken by them from the above named company. Success to good men and their measures!

Major J. E. Barrow, Indian Agent, at Bellevue, Nebraska Territory, has been taking very decided and energetic steps lately, to crush the unlawful traffic of trading liquor to the Indians; and also, to recover any stolen property found in their possession. This is also praiseworthy, and we hope that these isolated cases, are only the precursors of a favorable change, and better times for the citizens on this Frontier, and the westward-bound emigrants.

A united effort by the Government Agents, and Officers, with a sufficient number of troops at their command, we think cannot fail to suppress the Sons of the Forest, from perpetrating such high-handed and outrageous acts, as they of late years have done; and for the benefit of emigrants intending to move westward the coming Spring, and all others concerned we would candidly say: that the old Mormon route via Kanesville, Pottawatamie County, Iowa, has been proven beyond doubt to be the safest, healthiest, and best overland route to either Salt Lake, California, or Oregon.

For the Frontier Guardian.

KANESVILLE, Sept. 27th, 1851.

DEAR SIR:—Elder John Taylor's family have not been more punctual in writing to him, than Mr. Taylor has been in writing to them. The whole history of his travels and labor in connection with his important mission to France; were duly recorded, and sent with care to his beloved wife and family. I have posted several of his interesting letters to Mrs. Taylor, both in Paris, London, and other places.

Suffice it to say, that not only his constant prayers for the welfare of his wife and family, but also the various articles sent with me to Mrs. Taylor, prove him to be an affectionate husband and a kind father.

In answer to your interrogation, "What can the reason be, that Elder John Taylor's family have not received a line from him, since he left the Missouri River?" I will here say, that the curiosity that exists generally throughout the European Continent, about the Mormons, and the Great Salt Lake City, and California, induce some inquisitive Post Gents to pry into the contents and prig the letters having the address, Great Salt Lake City.

Wishing the Guardian success and prosperity.

I remain Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM HOWELL.

For the Guardian.

Minutes of a Public Meeting, held at the Court House, in Kanesville, Iowa, this 18th day of September 1851, to take into consideration the propriety of sending men to assist Major Barrow to recover stolen property from the Indians.

On motion Judge Burdick was chosen Chairman, and Charles H. Bassett, was chosen Secretary.

On motion of G. W. Harris, Dr. Luke Johnson, was appointed a committee to report to Major Barrow, the result of the meeting.

On motion: Resolved that the Clerk of this meeting be required to make out a report, accepting the proposition of the Major; provided, he shall pledge himself to be responsible to the people, that the request was made as a Government Agent, and that the individuals should be paid for their services.

On motion the meeting adjourned sine die. CHARLES H. BASSETT,
Secretary.

Caught.

In our last we noticed Mr. Mynster's Store having been broke open and a quantity of goods stole by some thief, or thieves; since then, Robert Keys, a wagon maker in this town, was suspected and a search warrant issued at the instance of Mr. M., for the purpose of ascertaining the fact. Through the vigilance of the officers and people, five boots identified by Mynster to be his, were found on Mr. Key's premises; and as the result of the affair as far as it has gone, Mr. K., is now in irons, and will be until next week, when the District Court will perhaps decide relative to his future destiny.

We fully approve of the course pursued by our citizens in not going that man's bail. Any man or woman, bearing the name of a Saint, that would engage in such a mean, low, and contemptible traffic, as pilfering or stealing from any person, should always receive from a virtuous community that response which the Savior used on a certain occasion parabolically, viz: "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity." We wish it distinctly understood, that the people of Pottawatamie County, are determined that they will not harbor knowingly among them, either thief, blackleg, or any other scamp that follows for a living, any, or either of the aforementioned disgraceful occupations; hence, those who intend to prosecute any of these lines of business, had better leave, for we have no use for them, and will not either succor, sustain, or countenance them, farther than to aid the proper officers to bring such characters to justice, so that they may receive the just penalty which the laws of Iowa award for committing such offences.

We mean what we say! It is the voice of the people of this section of country.

MOSCOW, HILLSDALE COUNTY,
MICHIGAN. Sept. 10, 1851.

DEAR SIR:—I passed through your flourishing little village of Kanesville in 1849, on my way to California, perhaps you may remember a company from Jonesville, Mich., called the "Fayette Rovers;" we were commanded by Capt. Baxter, and were all at your office and had a copy of your interesting paper sent to our friends. I have just returned after an absence of two years and five months. As I intend to cross the plains next summer and take my family with me, I would be thankful to you for a little information. Can all kinds of provisions suitable for the journey across the plains be bought at the Bluffs? can oxen and good milk cows be bought? if they can, at what prices? as I want to purchase some thirty head of cows. As I have crossed the plains before and know the road and the dangers well, I would like to travel with a good company; if any of your people are going in the spring I should like to travel in company with them. I have no doubt I would be of service to a company who had never crossed the plains. I see by your exchange paper at the office of the Jonesville Telegraph, that the Indians have been very troublesome this summer. I sincerely hope something will be done to stop the Pawnees in their system of plunder. There are a number of persons, here who intend to cross the plains next summer, but the reports about the Indians on the route by the Bluffs, will make a number take another route. I would like to have a company large enough to give the Indians a drubbing. Please answer this, and you will much oblige,

your obedient servant,
ANDREW HARTMAN.

In answer to the foregoing letter we would say: that Provisions, Wagons, Cows, Horses, Oxen, &c., &c., may be obtained at this place now, at very moderate rates.

Any number of cattle and horses, could be bought here last year during the time of emigration at reasonable prices; and as to rates next Spring, we presume that they will be in the same ratio.

We do not wish to deceive any person or persons intending to remove in the Spring westward; and for that reason, we cannot consistently quote rates for the future, because the demand and attendant circumstances, alone, can determine what they may be. Emigrants may rest assured of plenty of provisions, groceries, and every other article suitable for a journey across the Plains to be here; therefore none need fear to go short of what is necessary, if they come to this place. As to the Indians, we entertain no fears whatever; the Agent, Major Barrow, and also the Commandants at the different forts, latterly, have taken rather decided steps to crush their high-handed acts, and we trust, for the future that Government will succeed to negotiate with them for the right of way through their lands, so that the emigrant may pass through unmolested and unharmed. We anticipate a goodly number to leave the States for Salt Lake, Oregon, and California the coming season—therefore, emigrants intending to cross the plains should be here early, so as to insure regularity, safety and success. There is an abundance of corn, hay, and other useful articles produced by the farmer in this and surrounding counties; consequently none need fear, for scarcity of food for either man or beast upon their arrival at this point. Corn is selling at present from 20 to 25 cents per bushel; potatoes, 25 cents; turnips 10 cents; hay, $2 00 per ton; butter, 10 cents per pound; flour $6 50 per barrel and other articles in proportion. Again, we say: that Kanesville, Pottawatamie County, Iowa, is considered by many who have proven it, to be the best starting point; and the old Mormon trail, or northern route, is admitted by all to be the best route to either Salt Lake, California or Oregon.

Health of Kanesville and Vicinity.

Until of late the citizens of this town and County generally, enjoyed very good health; but for the last two weeks several have been attacked with chills and fever, intermittent, and bilious fevers; these no doubt have been occasioned by exposure, and the sudden changes of the weather from hot to cold.

Persons from a distance living here, more especially those lately from Europe, should be very careful in their diet, and also in changing their clothes when the weather changes, so as to keep the system protected from a sudden shock, and give it that regularity which the laws of nature require to insure temporal salvation. Cleanliness is a great preventive from many of those nauseous diseases which infest society.

A Radish.

E. M. Greene, District Clerk of Pottawatamie County, handed to us a day or two ago a radish, weighing over three pounds. Who can beat that?

Liquor Traffic with the Indians.

On Wednesday, the 24th ult., three men of the names of Williamson, Homer, and Rose, were brought to this town, under arrest of Major Barrow, Indian Agent, at Bellevue, Nebraska Territory, and were examined before Justice DeGraw, for trading spiritous liquors to the Indians.

Williamson turned State's evidence, Homer got clear for want of sufficient testimony; and Rose was committed; but owing to some alledged informality in the proceedings, he succeeded in obtaining his discharge through a writ of Habeas Corpus, before Judge Sloan.

Although these men got clear through some technical points in law; what will they do with PUBLIC OPINION? Those conversant with the testimony as far as it went, must have come to some conclusion before this time; for our part, we are satisfied relative to the direction in which the wind blows. In this as in all other cases, injurious to the interests of the citizens on this frontier, and the public generally, we say: Let the law have its full force without respect to party or creed, for that is, in our estimation, pure republican principles as far as they go.

International Magazine.

The September number of this periodical is before us, and as usual, is replete with choice engravings, and highly entertaining readable matter; also a certain portion from the muses, very interesting.

We pronounce this magazine, the most instructive we have seen lately.

Disinterred.

Arrived in this place on Thursday, the 18th ult., Mr. CHAS. C. LECOMPTE, of Ky., Mr. LECOMPTE'S object in visiting Kanesville, was to remove the remains of his brother, WM. M. LECOMPTE, Esq., who died in this town in may last to his native State. The remains were disinterred on Tuesday the 23d ult., and Mr. LECOMPTE, left here for Kentucky on the 25th ult. We wish him a safe and a speedy journey home. &c.

Melons.

M. L. Benson, County Surveyor, will please accept our thanks for favors shown to the Boys in the shape of several large, and delicious watermelons.

Dr. John M. Bernhisel.

We have received information from a reliable source, that the above named gentleman was met on Wednesday, the 24th ult., between Fort Kearney and the Forks of the road leading to Independence, in good health and spirits, wending his way to Washington City, to represent Utah, in the councils of the nation. Success to him—he is a gentleman in every sense of the word.

Thomas S. Williams, Esq.

We understand that this gentleman who left the Missouri river, on, or about the 24th of July, for Great Salt Lake City, accomplished the trip in seventeen traveling days.

Improvements for Sale.

The soil in Pottawatamie, and adjacent counties, is the richest in Iowa, and we understand from Mr. Thomas McKenzie, Agent for the sale of Land Claims in this County, that hundreds of good and valuable improvements may be purchased cheap for cash this fall, or early in the Spring. Some would take in exchange, horses, wagons, cattle, &c., &c.

Keep It Before the People.

The Bishop wants hay on tithing; also wood for the widows and orphans, to keep them warm through the winter. Who has a heart so cold, that would not engage in such a laudable undertaking? Bishop Palmer perhaps will tell!

AUSTIN, FREMONT CO.,
Sept. 12th, 1851.

DEAR SIR:—The following named persons arrived from Sacramento City, California, in sixty traveling days, they left the above named City on the 27th day of June, they bring plenty of the Ore with them, and some little left among us at this point.

M. Singleton, of Jackson Co., Iowa; Benjamin Bowman, of Fremont Co., Iowa; N. P. Swan, Red Rock, Iowa; J. Smith, Mercer Co., Missouri; James Dykes, Mercer Co., Missouri; J. B. Holesdaw, St. Charles Co., Missouri; Henry Shoch, Springfield, Illinois; Joe, a Pinte Indian, was in company. Yours truly, G. L.

The Nicaragua Route.

It is believed that the trip from New York to San Francisco can be made in twenty-five days by the Nicaragua route.

If so, there is no doubt but that it will become a favorite one. The passengers are landed 600 miles up the coast of Panama, and they reach the Atlantic at a point 200 miles north of Chagres. The distance from the Pacific to the Atlantic by the Nicaragua route is not much over 200 miles, all but 15 or twenty of which is by water conveyance, and all but ten miles of that by steamers. The time from Ocean to Ocean is about 30 hours.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Eastward They Wend Their Way.

Four of our worthy enterprising citizens, Messrs. H. W. Miller, J. E. Johnson, M. L. Benson, and F. J. Wheeling, with a troupe of 15 or 20 Omaha savages left our place a few days since, intending to visit the principal eastern cities in this country, and then cross the Atlantic to the "Old World." Their company of Indians comprise some of the finest and most noble in stature of the Omaha Nation. The small portion of country they now possess, lies between the Loupe Fork of the Platte river, and the Missouri, and bounded south, by the Nebraska or Great Platte river.

All emigrants going west that travel on the north side of the Platte, pass directly through their country and near their rude villages. On this account their game is getting scarce, and their original means of subsistence is cut off, and they are anxious to visit the civilized world, and learn their manners, customs, and inventions of civilization. Their performances will be exceedingly interesting and will doubtless attract much attention, and excite the curiosity of all. Their dances, music, and feats of agility, are well worth witnessing.

A CITIZEN.

China—The Chinese Insurrection.

HONG-KONG, Monday, June, 23.

The Intelligence which the present mail conveys is of a chequered and interesting nature, rather a foreshadowing of what is approaching than the record of what has already come. My expressed apprehensions regarding the underworking of that great agency which promises at no distant day to dismember this mighty empire, and the data on which they rested, were at the time questioned by the local journals.

But time has proved the correctness of what I have written you, and my next letter will probably announce the taking of the city of Canton by the insurgent mass, which like a mighty ocean, is moving gradually but irresistably onward, involving ruin in its course, unless the mandarins declare themselves and thus hasten the downfall of the present dynasty. Fall it assuredly will, and it will be well if the event finds our countrymen with sufficient naval force for their protection!

Already the military commanders and the civil commissioners appointed to suppress the rebellion have been carried off by death, lured by the charms of future reward, or dismayed at the number, strength, and success of the revolutionists. The man put forth as the leader of the movement has assumed regal honors, to the terror of the reigning and legitimate sovereign, who, fearing the disaffection of his troops quartered or raised in the disturbed provinces, has ordered choice soldiers from the capitol; if these soldiers in example of the local force, fraternise with the rebels, and re-echo the rebel shout, "down with the Tartar dynasty," the consummation will be reached sooner than the friends of the pretender expect.

Late Intelligence From Cuba--Arrival of the Empire City.

The Empire City from Havana, arrived at New York, on the 6th ult., bringing the following additional news from Havana:

The City of Havana has been the scene of much festivity, jubilee, and rejoicing for the last three days, in consequence of the capture of Gen. Lopez and his forces. The news of the capture of Lopez reached Havana on the night of the 30th Aug.; on that evening the principal buildings of the City were illuminated, and a great torch light procession was formed, and the City was full of rejoicing.

Gen. Lopez was taken in the interior of the Island, wandering alone and nearly exhausted from fatigue and hunger; he asked for something to eat at a farm house, and for permission to lie down, which was awarded him; while asleep he was made prisoner.

Of the followers of Lopez, one hundred are now in prison at Havana and are to be sent to Spain, for ten years confinement in the dungeons. They represent that their sufferings before being taken were intense; for several days they lived upon the leaves of trees; the last meal they ate was the horse of Gen. Lopez; they had no arms when taken. The loss of the Spanish had been over 2,000 men; they were defeated in every engagement. Gen. Enna was killed at the head of his advancing column.

Gen. Lopez was "garroted" at Havana, on the 1st of September, at 7 A. M.; he ascended the platform with much firmness, and made a short speech to the populace. His last words were. "I die for my beloved Cuba." Lopez took his seat, the machine was adjusted, and in two minutes he was dead.

The prisoners say that in no instance have the Creoles manifested the least disposition to join them.

The remainder of the expedition has either been shot or has perished from hunger.

Capt. Platt, of the United States ship Albany, visited the prisoners in the prison, and gained interesting accounts from them; which will be forwarded to us.

Complete Failure of the Expedition.

Our regular correspondence at Nashville, has furnished us the following startling news:

The Cherokee arrived at New Orleans on the 3d ult. The passengers bring accounts of the capture and execution of Lopez, at Havana. He died manfully. He is said to have been entirely abandoned by his men, and that after wandering about alone, was finally taken and executed. The whole expedition has failed. All of his men are either in prison or shot.

Lopez's last words were: "Adieu my dear Cuba!" You may rely upon this as the latest news received at New Orleans. I shall keep you advised of every thing further which may be received. — [Intelligencer.

The Frontier Guardian.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1851.

From the Deseret News.

The Celebration of the Fourth of July, in Great Salt Lake Valley.

On Friday morning, at day break, a salute of three round of Cannon ushered in, to the sleeping inhabitants of Great Salt Lake City, the glorious Fourth of July; and whose peaceful slumbers were distubed by the reverberating sound of the roaring artillery, commissioning them to prepare themselves for their chivalrous march to the shores of the Great Salt Lake—the world's ninth wonder. A response from Black Rock on the Lake at the same time, (though twenty miles from the City,) gave the assurance that it was prepared to receive its numerous and distinguished guests. At 7 o'clock the City began to be in motion, and the busy throng to assemble. The rattling of carriages, the rumbling of wagons, the tramping of horses, the floating of banners, the swelling tones of the Brass Band, the elegance, beauty, and smiles of the fair, and the smiling heavens above, gave an enchantment to the scene, and bespoke the occasion a nation's birth-day.

The City guard, of fifty armed mounted men, stationed themselves at convenient posts, and by their vigilance were determined that the City should rest in peace in the absence of its evacuated occupants.

The bishops also engaged a suitable number of footmen from their respective wards, as night and day watchmen, to remain on guard in their wards.

Order of Procession.

At 8 o'clock the cannon fired, when the Marshall of the day, H. S. Eldredge, organized the company for the Black Rock, for camping, and their return, to march in the following order, agreeable to the plan of the committee of arrangements:—S. M. Blair, Peter Clinton, Joseph Cain, Samuel W. Richards, Alonzo H. Raleigh, and L. Hardy.

1. The Military escort, commanded by Gen. Wells, carrying a banner.
2. The Band Carriage, (drawn by sixteen mules four abreast,) with six mounted guards in which was Capt. Pitt's Nauvoo Brass Band.
3. Of the first Presidency — Brigham Young, and suite, Heber C. Kimball and suite.
4. Of the Twelve Apostles — Wilford Woodruff and family, Ezra T. Benson and family, and Elder John Taylor's family.
5. Stranger guests
6. Presidents of the High Priests quorum, Stake, and Seventies.
7. Committee of Arrangements.
8. Bishops with their respective wards.

At 9 o'clock the Cannon gave the signal for the procession to move. The escort, numbering about sixty mounted men, with their beautiful banner, started from the west of the Bowery. The Band Carriage, the bulk of which would seem to forbid every thing but a tardy motion, presented its banner to the breeze, its noble animals running as if in defiance to time and space, and in spite of the most fearful prophecies of the timid. Following in its train was about 130 carriages and wagons, forming the cavalcade. As the train proceeded, the morning zephyrs changed their mildness, and the swelling gale blew in its northern course the dust; and the tormenting gnats hid their "diminished heads" as if to give place for better music.

After four hours travel the procession neared the Liberty Pole at the Lake, amid the firing of Cannon, guarded by eighteen artillery men under the command of E. Green, Lieut. On the lofty summit of the pole floated in proud triumph the stripes and stars of a new flag, made for the occasion. Its length was forty-five feet by fourteen and a half in breadth, with the American Eagle stretching its wings on an area of ten feet square; within its beak the folding drapery with the inscription "E Pluribus Unum." Under and above its left wing was the Utah Arms, the Bee Hive and Rising Star; under the right wing, a hundred and twenty Pounder discharging its contents.

Carriages were coralled, horses unharnessed, larietted, and given in charge of the herdsmen as by magic, a strict guard both sides of the herd night and day.

The people set themselves about getting dinner soon after their arrival. The refreshments were got up and enjoyed in Pic Nic style, each one contributing his share, and a general profusion made up the general feast. Snow from the Mountain top answered all the purposes to cool the refreshing draught.

At 3 o'clock the assembly gathered around the Band Carriage to hear speeches and orations; but the wind blew severely, which made it difficult for speaker and hearer to enjoy themselves. After an hour, they adjourned to meet again at 6 o'clock, during which time the company were variously engaged in recreations, by scaling the steep and Rocky Mountain, looking on the fading distance of the broad and swelling Lake, bathing in its briny waters, or walking leisurely to catch the glance of some well known face. These were a part of the pleasures of the Saints; and to sum up all, good order, peace, patriotism, plenty, sobriety, health, music, the feast of pleasure and the flow of soul, characterized the proceedings, and produced the charm of a heavenly spirit, and bespoke the scene of one harmonious whole.

At 6 o'clock the trumpet announced the time for speeches, orations, toasts, music, and singing, and a general movement brought a crowd to the Band Carriage, when speeches were made by Gov. Young, Pres't. H. C. Kimball, O. Spencer, J. M. Grant, Willard Snow, James Ferguson, and John Kay, which breathed the spirit of pure patriotism, true liberty, and happiness unalloyed.

At 10 o'clock the Cannon fired for prayer; after which dancing was continued till a late hour.

In the morn of the 5th, a number were assembled around the Band Carriage, to hear the admirable singing of John Kay and Jacob Hutchinson, together with the music of bagpipes, &c., and the almost endless variety of tunes which were played by the Band. The Marshall notified the Camp to be in readiness for a start at 10 o'clock, at which hour the Cannon fired the signal for departure, and the Camp again moved in order as at the first; the wind having changed to the north, blew the dust southward. At 2 o'clock, the procession was in order in the City; the Band played with spirit, near the Bowery, and the Cannon fired three salutes. The Marshall delivered the several companies into the hands of their respective commanders; and the people moved to their several homes. Thus ended the memorable Fourth at Great Salt Lake, without accident, or drunkenness, or discord, or anything to mar the enjoyment of a Pic Nic in the Valley.

Not having room we are obliged to defer the speeches and orations to a future time.

Toasts of the Fourth.

The Great Salt Lake—As she has hitherto been oblivious to the birth-day of freedom and Independence; may she this day be awakened to her sense of duty, and seek by her Briny sympathies to Preserve the Union, till she shall become a component part thereof, Even if She has to Pickle it. —[Wells.

The Anniversary of the Fourth of July—Our National Independence, made sacred by the devotion and patriotism of our forefathers to the cause of Liberty; may their children ever have a heart to cherish and preserve, and an arm to defend and protect her Institutions in the hour of peril.—[Wells.

The United States—From many one; from one many.—[Phelps. Tune—"Comin' through the Rye."

Brigham Young—President of the people, Governor of the country: may the evening of his days be as happy, peaceful, and prosperous, as the morning has been rough, tempestuous, but glorious.—[Wells.

Utah Territory—May her guardian during her non-age, have a care for her education and accomplishments, that, when she becomes of age, she may be enabled to eclipse the glory of her older sisters in their matrimonial alliances, by forming a Union which shall be inseparable, glorious, and perfect. —[Wells.

The Ladies of Deseret—Like early swarms, make full hives; and that's the way the Kingdom thrives.—[Phelps.

Washington, Sept. 10, A. M.

Official dispatches have been received at the Navy Department from Commodore Pratt, of the U. S. ship Albany. Commodore Pratt states, that the Captain General of Cuba permitted him to visit fifty-five of the American prisoners now confined at Havana. He conferred with Captain Kelly and Lieuts. Gruder and Baker. They gave him a detailed narrative of the Lopez expedition since the sailing of the Pampero. The whole party manifest much indignation towards Gen. Lopez and Mr. Segar, of the New Orleans Delta, for deluding them with false statements, that Cuba was in a state of revolt, &c.

On learning that Gen. Lopez was taken, words of joy were heard among the prisoners.

President Fillmore has sent copies of these dispatches to the Spanish Minister, with a view to enforce appeals already made to the Spanish Government, now that the invaders are captured and powerless, and asking the Government to deal mercifully with them.

A small piece of paper or linen, just moistened with turpentine, and put into a wardrobe or drawer for a single day, two or three times a year, is a sufficient preventive against moths.

Foreign News.

We have received our files of British papers, from which we make the following extracts:

England.—Several persons of the Latter-day Saints are about to quit Brighton, England, and other towns in the vicinity, and to emigrate to Deseret, a territory in California, almost as large as England, and where not less than 300,000 of them have taken up their abode, on or near the banks of the Great Salt Lake.

The number of persons who visited the Crystal Palace, on the 19th, amounted to 57,050 persons, and the receipts amounted to £2,773 7s. It has been decided by the Commissioners, that the building should close on Saturday, October 11. A meeting of the Commissioners will be held at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday, October 15, to receive the reports of the several juries, &c. On jurors, and the foreign and local commissioners, and the members of the local committees, is required. Immediately after the proceedings, leave will be given to exhibiters to remove their goods.

The reports of the juries, and the names of the persons receiving prizes, will afterwards be published in the London Gazette. Medals will also be given to the juries—the foreign and local commissioners—the chairman, treasurer and secretary of the local committees, and other persons who have rendered services, accompanied by a certificate and a copy of the reports of the juries. All the memorials will be presented simultaneously, but no date is yet fixed.

Ireland.—The state of the potato crop continues to be a subject of interest and anxiety, in consequence of the alarming rumors which have been circulated. We learn from the most reliable sources, that, though symptoms of disease are apparent on the leaves and stock of the potato, the tuber generally remains unaffected. One paper asserts that the late rains, so far from being injurious, has, to all appearance, stayed the disease. The Cork Examiner states, as the result of careful enquiries in that and the surrounding counties, that the "crop is generally safe, and that an ample supply will be left, after all deductions, not only for human food, but for many useful purposes to which that valuable esculent is applied."

Great excitement prevailed in Ireland in consequence of the new law prohibiting the prelates of the Catholic Church from assuming their official titles. A great meeting of Catholics was to be held at Dublin on the 19th, and one of the Bishops, in a letter to the Committee, had openly defied the law by signing himself "John, Archbishop of Taum." The other prelates, though equally indignant in view of the new law, are content with prefixing the cross to their names. The excitement was very fierce and bitter.

Col. Fitz Henry Warren.—It ever gives us pleasure to bear testimony to the worth of a faithful public servant. This gentleman who is second assistant Postmaster General, has since his instalment in office, exhibited an efficiency in the discharge of his duties which is not only gratifying to his political friends, but is also highly appreciated by the opponents of the present Administration. His business tact, strict application and kind deportment towards those who have business with him, have rendered him one of the most popular functionaries in any of the departments, and justly made him a good example for many who occupy comparatively higher stations in the Government. —[Washington Telegraph.

Fame and admiration weigh not a feather in the scale against friendship and love, for the heart languishes all the same.

Overland Immigration.

A copy of the El Dorado News, of Saturday last, contains an announcement of the arrival at Placerville of the first companies of the immigration by the plains this season. The most forward party reached that place on the 17th inst., making the trip from St. Joseph in seventy-seven days. This party came by the way of Sublette's cut-off, and report having met two returning companies of Californians, who were in good health and well advanced. The first division of these homeward bound travelers was met near Soda Springs. The second camp was encountered at the head of the Humboldt.

The California overland immigration is "rolling on." It will scarcely exceed a thousand souls, according to the representation of the advance guard. About two thousand turned off on the Oregon road. There are few families on their way across the plains, the accounts of the sufferings of the last year's emigration having intimidated many.

The first company that arrived at Placerville was composed of the following persons. They were a party of packers:

Laporte, Ind—L. W. Keely, C. C. Crandell, W. Lemon, and John Hart.

Joiliet, Ill—H. Carpenter, C. Carpenter, N. Flax.

On the 21st, the second party of immigrants "packed in," arriving at El Dorado in good health, making the journey from Kanesville, on the Missouri River, in seventy-nine days. They were not molested seriously by the Indians along the route, their chief trouble being the scarcity of grass. For about a fornight travel after leaving the Missouri, they found grazing good, but about two hundred miles this side of Fort Laramie it failed, and continued scarce during the greater part of the way.

This company came via the Salt Lake country, and found the colony prosperous and increasing. They rejoice in the prospect of full harvests, and received the emigrants kindly.

We append the names of this company. They have suffered none from sickness along the route, and report those behind making excellent progress:

Dundee, Ill.—Thos. Pindar, Riley Holdridge.

Potosi, Wis.—Samuel Hunt, Mr. Garey.

Racine, Wis.—Capt. Head.

Missouri—Noah Simpson.

Elkhart County, Mich.—M. Rowe, Mr. Bates, John Rowe.

POETRY.

Noblemen.

BY C. D. STUART.

The noblest men I know on Earth,
Are men whose hands are brown with toil:
Who, backed by no ancestral graves,
Hew down the woods and till the soil,
And win thereby a prouder fame
Than follows king or warrior's name.

The working men! whate'er their task,
To carve the stone or bear the hod—
They wear upon their honest brows
The royal stamp and seal of God!
And brighter are their drops of sweat
Than diamonds in a coronet!

God bless the noble working men,
Who rear the cities of the plain;
Who dig the mines and build the ships,
And drive the commerce of the main;
God bless them! for their swarthy hands
Have wrought the glory of all lands.

Right is Might.

PATIENCE! and steadfast adamantine will!
We will do right, though the great murmuring world
Deride and thwart us, asking, Have you skill
To guide your bark with all her sails unfurled
Against the tempest of my scorching breath,
That naught can shield thee from except more dreadful Death.

To thee indeed, Death wears a fearful face,
See thou to that, he is our loving friend,
Who calmly leads us with an awful grace,
To where all doubting and all strife will end;
And as the guerdon of our hard-won race,
We shall embrace fair Truth, long sought in every place.

But for thy scorn, laugh on! we love thee not,
And how can that we love not, make us grieve?
Yet we must pity thee and thy sad lot,
Mirah to drink, the living waters leave—
Ay, would endure all grief that thou canst give,
Could our last wearied breath but teach thee how to live.

Thou yet shalt see our bark's triumphant way,
Like the far sky star's in its fullest prime;
Bearing divinest Truth's perfected sway,
God's fairest child, helped in his chosen time!
Wait, and in quietness possess thy soul,
Trust His almighty arm, Right shall all things control.

MISCELLANY.

A Yankee in a Shower Bath,

Kind reader, did you ever take a shower bath? I mean a right cold one, and in cool weather? If you have, you know how to appreciate the feelings of my friend, Tom C——, upon the momentous occasion of his first shower bath, in the city of Boston! and month of March, 184–.

Tom C—— hails from a long way "down east," or, as he used himself to say, he "was brought up as near to sunrise as he could get without burning, and where the woods were so thick the moon couldn't rise without help." He stands six feet two natural, and six feet six when he stretches. His breadth is not quite in proportion, although his bones were gotten up for a giant. Had they been fairly covered with flesh, he would have been invaluable to "Barnum." The truth is, Tom was very lean, indeed, and his leanness annoyed him exceedingly. his clothes would be open at the elbows and knees in half the time of those of his fatter fellows, and Tom vowed to get fat, if only for the sake of economy.

Some kind friend recommended the Gymnasium as likely to be beneficial, and Tom forthwith enrolled himself at Sheridan's. It was there I first met him, and a right good fellow, with plenty of fun and wit in him, he proved to be, in spite of his unpromising exterior.

Among the gymnasts, Dr. —— was conspicuous, not only for his skill in all athletic feats, but also for his beautiful, compact form, and superabundant muscle. When he "peeled," his arms and chest looked smooth as a woman's, and yet as muscular as those of a "pocket Hercules."

How our friend Tom envied the Doctor! Many questions did he put to him about regimen, exercise, &c., and their effect in producing flesh upon the human frame. The Doctor attributed this redundancy to plenty of exercise, plenty to eat, and above all, to the daily use of the shower bath.

"Waal," said Tom, one day, with his inimitable drawl, "I'm sure, I've shinned up and down these ladders and ropes long enuff; as for eating, 'taint to be expected that one man can eat enuff to fatten such an all-fired skeleton as mine. I wish I may be darned if I don't try that shower bath you tell me so much about."

As Tom and I were as thick as two such thin men could be, I volunteered to show him where he could get one in short order. We accordingly started for the United States Hotel, then called Texas. In the basement story of this house were a large number of bathing rooms, fitted up with hot, cold, and shower baths. The latter very temporary wooden boxes standing on end, with doors bolting on the inside, and a very capacious showering apparatus in the top.

I went in to take a warm bath, while Tom made ready for his cold one in the next room. As the partitions were very thin, I overheard him soliloquizing something after this fashion:

"Waal, now, that upright coffin with holes in the bottom, and a sieve in the top, may pass for a shower bath here, but I guess if we had it down east, 'twouldn't be long before we had it sot for eels! Blast the thing! wonder how it works. Here, you Susan, Sally, whats your name?" calling to the servant girl, "just come here, and show me how the critter works. I don't see no shower."

"Oh, my!" cried the girl; "don't you know how? Why, 'tis easy enough! You pull this 'ere string, and I guess you'll see a shower, and feel it too."

Tom, who stood outside, caught hold of the string, and before the girl could interfere gave it a tremendous pull, when down came a deluge of water, spattering them, and swimming the carpet.

"There, now you see!" said the girl, indignantly.

"Yes, I see now," replied Tom very coolly.

All this amused me considerably, but I had a presentiment that the fun was not finished.

Tom adjourned to the room on the other side of mine, and the girl to wiping up the carpet. Before Tom had gotten ready to enter his bath, I was out of mine and nearly dressed. All had been still in the room for several minutes except an occasional muttering of discontented sentences, such as—

"Wonder what there is about this to fatten a man. Never heard Noah was very fat, and he took one for forty days. Mighty small place to stuff my carcase into. Guess there isn't much danger of the water coming up high enuff to drown me. Wonder if 'twill fall any thing as that blasted shower did down to Bath, last summer," &c.

"I heard him, after stepping into his closet, shut the door, which he carefully bolted; and the next minute there came a crashing "slam bang" on the floor that made the house shake, followed by the most terrific screams and shouts of "Oh! Oh! Oh! Lord! Oh! Oh! Thunder and Lightning! Murder! Fire! Water! Let me out! I'm drowning! For God's sake, help!" and ending by calling on me voiciferously.

In an instant, not only I, but every servant and all others within hearing, male and female were in the room. Although he had not ceased shouting, nothing was to be seen of Tom, but in the centre of the floor laid the shower bath, door downwards and the whole affair absolutely jumping, from Tom's superhuman efforts to relieve himself. We rolled it over, the door flew open, and out tumbled the most astonishing mass of arms, legs, and body, ever presented to the astonished gaze of human eyes.

One moment was given to astonishment, the women scampered, and then mortal risibles could stand it no longer.

We rolled on the floor in little short of convulsions. Tom raised himself up, too happy in his fancied escape to be very angry at us, but still evidently trying to assume some dignity. Dignity from such a figure, in such a plight!! We roared louder than ever, and Tom, finding it was of no use, joined in the chorus, until we were compelled to stop from sheer exhaustion.

He then, having hustled on a part of his garmen's, answered our repeated inquiries of "How it happened?"

"Why, you see, when I got in that infernal man-trap there, I bolted the door, and then it took me some time to screw up my courage, I knew it was all-fired cold, and so I thought I would bring down the shower a little at a time. Waal, you see, I pulled the string—consarn it—kinder softly, about an inch tu once. I had my shoulders drawn up, my head down, my eyes and teeth shut, and gave it another little pull, when "kerchouse!" came a hull ocean of ice-water, right slap on my head, taking away my breath, and fairly "quackling" me. I made one jump for the door, but the plaguy thing was bolted, and over went the hull machine "kerslap" on the floor! then I got frightened, and thought I was drowning sure enuff. Maybe I didn't sing out, and try to strike out but twarn't no use. I filled the machine so full I couldn't stir enuff only to knock all the skin off my knees and elbows. Just then you came in and let me out, and you know all the rest. Plaguenation take the shower bath! I wouldnt take another if 'twas to make me as fat as Daddy Lambert;" nor has poor Tom to this day, but remains a perfect Calvin Edson on a mammoth scale.

CHEVAL.

California.

From a letter of our San Francisco correspondent, which should have reached us two weeks ago, we make the following extracts:

A cargo of live hogs arrived a day or two since, from the Sandwich Islands, and sold at from 20 to 25 cents per pound, on foot, or 30 cents per pound when dressed. The same vessel brought over 400 turkeys, and 300 hens. The latter sold readily at $2 50 each.

The crop of hay this season will go far towards supplying all our need. In the valley of Santa Clara, six tons to the acre is not an uncommon yield, and at present readily commands $8 50 per ton. The crop of barley will be harvested within two weeks, say by 1st July, and promises well though squirrels are found to be very destructive to many fields, compelling the farmers to resort to a liberal use of arsenic to, poison them.

The mines continue productive, though it has been recently remarked by a gentleman high in the confidence of Government, who has recently returned from a trip through the mines, and the amount of money spent and to be expended the next three years, in Quartz Rock machinery, and experiments of various kinds, involving heavy expenditures, will exceed the profits on gold obtained therefrom in the subsequent three years of labor and toil. The subject is beginning to engage the attention of many of our citizens.

A project is now on foot by many leading Southern men—strong politicians, to bring about a division of this State.—[Miners Express.

Great Fire.

Bennett's Mammoth Mill at Muscatine in ashes

From the Muscatine Enquirer of the 22d inst., we learn that the magnificent flouring mill of Mr. Joseph Bennet of Muscatine, was, on the night of the 22d, together with the out buildings, 150 barrels of flour, 500 or 600 bushels of wheat, 4,000 flour barrels, the fixtures and tools, warehouse, and residence of Messrs. Browning, and some half dozen stables, consumed by fire. The loss of Mr. Bennet is set down at $45,000; insurance, 15,000, and other property to the amount of $5,000, upon which there was no insurance.

This is a sad calamity for Muscatine.

What a man has learned is of importance; but what he can do, and what he will do, are more significant things.

A Strong Speech.

The following we clip from the Cleveland Herald, Ohio, of the 27th ult.:

Cuban Meeting in New York.

There was a tremendous gathering of people in the Park, the evening of the 22d, to give an expression of feeling on the late massacre at Havana and the cause of Cuban Independence. The Herald estimates the number at 5,000. The flag of Cuban Independence was suspended over the stand, and flags and placards were scattered through the immense crowd. Bands of music were present.

"The Band played 'Hail Columbia,' once more, and Judge Read, of Cincinnati, was introduced by the Chairman, Mr. Purdy. He thought that the Americans had a right to assist any Nation to acquire liberty. He was one of those Americans who went in for annexing the whole continent and all the adjacent Islands. As an American citizen, born in the West, he would say that we had to determine that Cuba should be free—and free she shall be—no power on earth or on high shall prevent us from freeing her. (Great cheering.) The blood of those fifty-two men would rise up with a vengeance, and accomplish the destiny of Cuba. Cuba must be free. The voice of God Almighty, speaking through the mouth of the American people, declares it. He spoke as one of God Almighty's own messengers, and he declared that we had a right to make people free all over the world wherever we chose, and he spoke as man who advocated freedom all over the world. We had a right to go to Cuba armed, or unarmed, just as we pleased. Speak! talk! act! said he—make Cuba the gem of the sea, free, and down with old Spain! (Three groans for Spain.)

A curious and laughable exhibition at the London Fair, is a bedstead, containing a spring in the mattress, which, being set at a certain hour, wakes the sleeper, by turning him straight over on the floor.

Beauty and use are the two hands of God, and ever, when the one has made a creature for our good, the other adorns it for our delight.

The Irrationality of Schism and Dissent, Or the Errors of Modern Christendon.

BY JAMES F. BELL.

We will now enquire what was the constitution of the Primitive Church?

First, as to its Priesthood or Ministers, and the authority which they held; secondly, its doctrines and ordinances; and thirdly, its blessings and confirmatory gifts.

St. Matthew records that the Savior authorised and sent forth Apostles. St. Paul also states that there were set "in the Church, first Apostles, secondarily Prophets, thirdly Teachers," &c. 1 Cor. xii, 28. Eph. iv, 11. These, then, were the ministers or Priesthood of the Primitive Church, but the existing orders of Priesthood among the denominations of the present day are very different; for instance, one order consists of first, a Pope; secondly Bishops; thirdly Priests; another order consists of, first, the Queen; secondly Bishops, and so forth; thirdly, of itinerant and local preachers, class-leaders, &c. Since they differ from each other, and the Primitive order, it is evident they have made such unauthorised innovations and changes as clearly distinguish them from that system which is emphatically unchangeable, and as two or more different things are, from the nature of the case not identical; so, for the same reason, the popular systems of the present day are not to be confounded with Primitive Christianity.

The power and authority exercised by the Apostles and others was such, that in the name Jesus they could remit and retain sins, cast out devils, heal the sick, &c., &c., but where do we find this power among the religious denominations of the day? With two or three exceptions, it is universally denied as being necessary. With regard to the Roman Catholics, and others who profess to hold and exercise this power, I would say, that even were it really the case, their systems are in other respects so diametrically opposed to the institutions of Christ as to nullify in toto their claims to genuineness and divine authenticity.

With regard to the doctrines and ordinances of the Church, as by Christ established, I may state without fear of successful contradiction, that there is as much, or even more disparity between them and the institutions of modern Christendom, than there exists even upon the subject of Priesthood. Formerly, the sinner was required to believe and repent prior to being baptized, but now this order is reversed and unconscious babes are sprinkled in the face, and when of riper age are instructed to believe and repent.

The mode of baptism has also been changed, for, both sacred and profane history abound in evidence, that the immersion of adults was the original mode; this fact is also acknowledged by many learned theologians of high repute, among the denominations professing Christianity; but instead of "immersion," the general mode now adopted, is "sprinkling," while many have abolished the ordinance altogether. The laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost has met with a similar fate, for some reject it as an "obsolete" and "useless ceremony," while others have but vague ideas as to its import and necessity. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and the anointing of the sick, have also been treated with indifference and neglect; by those who in this our day have assumed preaching as a profession, and by their sordid practices reduced it to a miserable trade.

The blessings and confirmatory gifts next claim our attention, and by referring to the New Testament, we learn that these signs were to follow them that believed. In the name of Jesus Christ they should "cast out devils, speak with new tongues, take up serpents, drink any deadly thing and it should not hurt them, lay hands upon the sick and they should recover." St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, writes plainly upon the subject, stating that "there are diversities of gifts," and "differences of administrations," "but the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man" (that is, every faithful man) "to profit withal." To one is given the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge, to another faith, to another the gifts of healing, to another the working of miracles, to another prophecy, to another discerning of spirits, to another divers kinds of tongues, to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the self-same spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

Now the sects of the present day, with one or two exceptions, not only lay no claim to the enjoyment of these gifts, but in their headlong career of apostacy and superstition, go even farther, for, with the utmost effrontery, and in the most posstitive terms, they deny their use and necessity. They argue, that because they have ceased from among the churches they are no longer necessary; but this is a miserable subterfuge, invented for the purpose of hiding the deformity and weakness of those systems which, while professing to be the institutions of Christ, are utterly destitute of the "Power of Godliness." Let the reader remember that these are the promises of Christ, who spake the words of his Father, the Eternal and All-wise God; let him then call to mind the words of St. Paul, that "all the promises of God are yea and Amen." And if he can then believe the hireling priests of the present day, when they give the lie to both Christ and Paul, by denying their words, as recorded in the Scriptures, he may conclude that he is on the road to infidelity, and half way toward practical Atheism.

In order to illustrate in a forcible manner the absurdity of the course adopted by the religionists of the present day in changing the institutions of Christ, we might picture to ourselves some Saint of the former times resurrected from the dead, proceeding in the guise of a modern preacher to St. Paul's, St. Peter's, St. John's, or some other Chapel, to obtain an interview with ministers thereof. He would perhaps ask for an Apostle, Prophet, Patriarch, or Elder; but would be informed that no such authorities were known there, although it was true they had the writings of some who lived and flourished centuries ago. The wisdom and learning of the present day were so great, that their divines had thought fit to introduce a new and unheard of Priesthood quite different in name and nature from that of former times; for instance, they had now a Pope and Cardinals, Friars, and such like, in one denomination; a Parson, Clerk and Curate in another, and so on.

Our incognito would certainly be surprised at this, but when he was informed that instead of baptizing penitent believers, they now sprinkled unconscious babes, his surprise would be still greater, and would be increased tenfold when he was informed, that infant depravity and eternal damnation were two of the most favorite and popular doctrines of the age: but when he was informed that they now worshipped a God without body, parts or passions, and, that for the purpose of propagating those absurd and unscriptural doctrines, their preachers were hired like tradesmen for so much per year, his astonishment would be unutterable. His soul would be moved with pity at their sad condition, and he would desire the privilege of preaching to them; if he obtained it, which is exceedingly doubtful, he would preach unto them "Christ and him crucified," and so far he might proceed in peace, but when he attempted to declare unto them the nature of genuine repentance and baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, exhorting their hired preachers to give up their salaries, and renounce their immaterial and passionless God, his doctrine would sound strange and new, for they had from their earliest infancy been so thoroughly traditionated in these erroneous ideas that they could hardly recognise truth when they heard it; indeed some would so far forget themselves that they would publicly call him an impostor and deceiver. The strange preacher would, however, continue to unfold to them the plan of former times, and to speak of the wonderful works of God which were made manifest among his people, he would declare unto them that some spake in tongues, some interpreted, some prophesied, others had visions, some healed the sick, and others obtained the visitations of holy angels. After he had shown forth the power and beauty of the ancient gospel, he would argue the necessity of the same plan now, by which the same gifts and blessings could be imparted as formerly. As he did so, some would wonder, others would believe, while a third class, consisting chiefly of hired preachers, would cry out fanatic! fool! madman! imposter! false prophet! and so on. But now picture to yourself my dear reader, their unutterable confusion and dismay, if the unknown preacher should forthwith declare himself the Son of God! We might imagine him bursting forth with language like this:—What! have ye so far erred and strayed from my ways, that my gospel and its gifts are disregarded, and counted as a strange thing! away ye workers of iniquity, ye rulers of the darkness of this world, who have caused my children to err with your vanity and lies.

Having shown that the systems of the day including Papists, Protestants, and all classes of Dissenters are materially different, in Priesthood some in Doctrine, others, from the Primitive Church of Christ and the Apostles; it follows that as they all deny any revelation authorising the change which has thus been effected by them they are all impostors or imposed upon; in either case their preaching and authority are merely human and therefore essentially imperfect and displeasing unto God: and consequently when they one and all declare that "the knowledge of the true plan of salvation has continued among men from the days of Christ to the present moment," they utter a falsehood of the most glaring kind.

I will now endeavor to show forth the irrationality of another idea which is acted upon in this our day on a very extensive scale; and which has been, and still is productive of incalculable mischief; namely, that any one who desires, may go forth and proclaim almost any doctrine he thinks proper, provided only that he sincerely believes it to be true: and that he is qualified to do so without receiving any appointment and heavenly ordination either directly or indirectly.

Now it is a fact much to be lamented that man with all his sincerity is but a fallible and short-sighted being; and that in matters of faith particularly men entertain and teach a great variety of opposite opinions; but as opposites cannot both be true of the same thing at the same time, it is evident that some are propagating fallacies and fictions, under the impression that they are positive truths and facts. Yet, if sincerity be a sufficient salvo for their mis-directed zeal, they are not at all to blame, but have as much right to propagate error as they have to inculcate truth.

Wherever this principle is adopted, error will have more advocates than than truth, and will will more rapidly advance in the popular estimation; for, out of one hundred teachers of conflicting opinions, one only can be right; hence there will be ninety-nine on the side of error, and only one to advocate truth. This one will be subject to endless disadvantages, for the popularity will be so great, and the minds of its votaries so dark, that the grandeur of truth would be unperceived, and its value utterly unknown. He would have to encounter the prejudice which the teachers of error had excited inthe popular mind, and to submit insults and indignities of every variety. Yet, if he does so in patience, his labor of love will not be altogether in vain, for his example will effect what his preaching could not. The honest and ingenuous will admire his fortitude and zeal, their interest in the preacher gradually increase, and they will ultimately espouse his cause.

The seeker after truth will suffer corresponding disadvantages; for, after hearing in succession the majority of the false teachers, and perhaps being deceived by them, as he afterwards discovers, he will conclude that the object of his pursuit is either a phantom of imagination, or else that it is utterly beyond his reach; hence, when the humble messenger of truth does really present himself, he will hardly condescend to hear his doctrine, thinking probably that he is a deceiver like the rest. Seeing then that indiscriminate and self-assuming authority neither develop truth nor accelerate its progress, but that on the contrary it gives currency to lies, and stamps error with a value and importance to which it has no claim; it follows that the idea is irrational and therefore untrue.

Another very popular but equally erroneous idea entertained by the professors of the present day, is, that "any further revelations than those contained in the present canon of the Old and New Testaments are unnecessary; and that we have no reason to expect any more." But let me ask, if, as I have clearly shown, the knowledge of the true gospel has for many centuries ceased from among men, how can it be restored again except by revelation? and again, if indiscriminate and assumed authority be irrational and of demoralising tendency, how can the necessary qualifications for a true minister of the true gospel be obtained except by revelation! It is written, "unto the wicked God saith, 'what hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth!'" These words seem to especially directed to those who reject new revelation, and whom the Lord calls "wicked" for so doing; for the next verse reads as follows: "seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee." It is also written in another place, "how shall they preach except they be sent," and in another, "this honor no man taketh unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron." From these passages we learn that none should go forth to preach or minister in the ordinances of the gospel, until they are "sent" "as was Aaron;" now we understand that Aaron was called by revelation through his brother Moses, for the Lord told Moses that he (Aaron) should be a spokes-man for him, and directed him to "speak unto him and put words in his mouth: the Lord even spoke unto Aaron, saying go into the wilderness to meet Moses, and all this was done that Aaron might be called and appointed in God's own way, namely, by revelation through one who already holds the Priesthood. Hence, as none should preach except they be "sent," and none will be sent of God but in the same manner "as was Aaron," that is by revelation, it follows that revelation is necessary for the appointment of preachers! and will continue to be so, so long as preachers are necessary. It is further evident that those who deny new revelation are not sent of God, but by so doing they renounce the only channel by and through which they could be sent.

It is written that "all shall know the Lord" from the least even to great:" but in what manner must this knowledge be obtained? It is written, no man knoweth the Father, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him; hence, during the great Millennium all who know the Lord will have obtained the knowledge by revelation, while on the other hand, those "who know not God" will "be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord." This unfortunate class of individuals must be those, who, by rejecting new revelation, were unable to obtain this knowledge, and who by hating instruction, and casting behind them the word of the Lord, which was offered to them in their own day, because "WICKED" and therefore ripe for the judgment of the Lord. We read in the Book of Amos iii. 7, "that the Lord will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the prophets." And again, Isaiah xxx. 9, 13, we learn that they who reject Prophets and Prophecy, are "rebellious people, lying children" whose iniquity shall be as a breach in a high wall "whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant."

IN A FIX.—The editor of a Southern pa- says shat he has three times put on a clean shirt for the purpose of calling on the Governor of his State, but did not see him, and concludes on account of his disappointments with the following notice:

"The Governor is respectfully informed that we cannot afford to make another such a run upon our linen, and if we are to have the honor of making his acquaintance, he will have no reason to complain if we are not altogether in trim."

Nothing sits so gracefully upon children, and make them so lovely, as habitual respect and dutiful deportment towards their parents and their superiors.

To speak well is to sound like a cimbal, but to do well is to act like an angel. He who practiceth what he reads, God will help him to understand what he understands not.

A Chapter on Reform.

BY J. TITUS TOWNSEND.

Society and its Condition—the Pulpit and the Press—Theatres—Woman as she is, and as she should be—Her education, influence, and Destiny—Man's Duty.

No one will deny the progress of this age in the paths of science and knowledge, but that man's advance is equal rapid towards perfection of character and consequent happiness, few are willing to admit; true—he can produce the countless achievements of art as his handiwork, command the very elements to his bidding, or measure the blue distance from star to star; yet is he not, with all his works and aspirations, the slave of pride and evil passions, with all his greatness and power, wholly unable to govern himself in the smallest matters relating to his moral and physical being? To look upon the masses of earth's population is to look upon a condition of toil, suffering, and degradation. Ignorance and vice, hand in hand; intemperance and licentiousness, and human oppression over all, presents to us a picture from which we may well start in dismay! Select, if you will, from the mass, the minds that govern all human action. Our wisest legislators, most profound scholars, earth's greatest reformers, and art's most talented disciples—even here you will find that deficiency in physical and moral excellence, which alone is sufficient to clog the wheels of progress. The tongue of eloquence and the voice of inspiration may teach the duty of man to man; but we look in vain for an unexceptionable example among the most godly of our pulpit monitors. If the master-spirits of creation thus lack the essential elements of perfection, we may search the works of human life in vain for peace and happiness. In truth, life is full of suffering. Through an incessant pampering of appetite and other animal propensities, a constant violation of the laws of nature, diseases innumerable are entailed upon us, sapping to the foundation the spring of life and energy; hence it is that so few, comparatively, arise from the turmoil of the million to eminence and distinction; that such countless scores drop into the grave before their years are half told.

Selfishness is the all-pervading spirit of this boasted age of refinement, and mammon is the universal God, before whose gilded altar conscience, truth, and all the purer feelings of man's nature are blindly sacrificed. Wealth is a passport through life, more potent than knowledge, or virtue, and far surpasses charity in the covering of sins.

The causes of the present unhappy condition of the human family, and the remedies for the social evils that now exist, are matters than which none more important can occupy the intelligent mind; suggesting volumes of earnest, thoughtful consideration, and a spacious field of action; yet how few, with the moral courage to enter upon the field, and prosecute the noble work of the earth's redemption. The pulpit is given to expounding theoretic hobbies, distorting pure scripture to meet the misconceptions of sectarian creeds; vilifying opposing sects, and, not unfrequently, directly pampering the pride and folly of an auditory assembled at fashion's call to compare silks and jewels, and to lounge on soft cushions in lively inattention to all else than fashion's mockery.

The Press, holding the sceptre of immense power for good or evil, is equally blinded by passion, prejudice, and self interest, and almost wholly subservient to the "Almighty Dollar." Lofty talents, fitted to inspire the multitude with the noble spirits of truth, love, and justice, are perverted to the vilest of uses, emanating from which society is drugged to enervation with licentious lore, thrilling illustrations of sickly fiction, teeming with every device, skillfully woven to intoxicate and mislead the imagination, to feed vanity, excite passion, pervert pure natural feeling, and fill the mind with desires never to be realized.

In like manner our theatres are given to the gratification of a morbid craving, and to the perpetuation of human folly—abounding in pernicious examples and influences, and exhibiting those high-wrought, overdrawn pictures of life, tinseled with scenes whose only existence spring from man's over-tasked and fevered brain. Scenes of blood and revenge, hypocrisy and intrigue, half-attired dancing women, unblushing blasphemy, all alike injurious to the morals and demoralizing to the senses. Nor does it require deep research to trace out the cause of the evils with which society is afflicted. We conceive that this distempered condition may be cured, but by no quack theory, religious revival, or change of costume. Let us look at home for the cause and remedy.

Woman and her offspring! At the tenderest age should the seeds be sown that, with careful nurture, will ripen into a blessed harvest. Is it not on woman that the task devolves of regenerating the fallen race of man? Is not her precepts and examples the instillation that ever controls his efforts? Woman's influence is the soil in which man's destiny is determined for good or ill. If the soil is barren or uncongenial, principle gives place to corruption, and it springs forth, like rank weeds, to contaminate. How shall we find woman of the present day? Is it with that healthy constitution and self-controlling power of mind fitting her for the important duties of her mission? On the contrary, shall we not find her, intellectually and physically, incompetent for her great task? Her very limited education consists of a vain show of parlor accomplishments; her time is occupied in altering the pattern of her dress, disseminating senseless gossip, or pursuing the phantom pleasures of life in the Ball-room, at theatres, or at midnight parties. Her God is Fashion; and to her arbitrary and life-destroying decrees, she gives her time with thoughtless devotion—and man! the "Lord of Creation," whom she has brought up to know no better, deems education unsuited to her province. He is content that she should remain at home, know nothing, and mind the baby. With all his wisdom, he has not the penetration to discern that the care of the baby is a duty of more consequence than the ruling of empires; if that duty was properly performed, we should need no laws, no prisons, no doctors.

It is not to woman alone that we must look for reform; she is at present incapable of the great effort. Let man see to it that woman is better educated, and with the view of the great duties devolving upon her, let woman arise in her dignity, rebel at once against the caprices and tyrantizing dominion of Fashion, dress healthfully, take air and exercise, observe temperance in all things, and become nature's peerless coworker in the grand work of human elevation.

Domestic Mechanics.

A correspondent of the Washingtun Intelligencer addresses a few very good hints to farmers and others located at inconvenient distances from mechanical aid, as regards an easy manner of remedying the ravages of time incident to every homestead. He proposes that all such persons, instead of enduring unsightly dilapidations and casual breakages, merely because there is no mechanic near to remedy it, should provide themselves with a complete set of tools, and habituate themselves to the use of them. It would be a pleasant pastime to persons, from time to time, or make repairs on their houses or grounds, would save them a great deal of money, and would make the place look neat and pretty, whereas the want of a pane of glass, a few boards and nails, or a half dozen of bricks, gives it an unsightly appearance. We cordially second his suggestion, and would advise all our friends so situated to follow his advice. The writer makes an estimate of the cost of the necessary tools; and, according to his estimate, they could all be purchased for about $15 00. How little this is compared to what is constantly paid out for repairs required on every house.

Arrivals Through the Plains.

A company of California emigrants arrived in this city on the night of the 11th September, coming through from Sacramento City in 62 days. They encountered much difficulty with the Indians, with whom they had five skirmishes. Their names are Capt. C. Jackson, B. F. Howard, John Cuningham, George Vance and son. They left one of their company upon the road, who was fatally wounded in one of the battles.

They say that the Indians were rapidly assembling for the great council at Fort Laramie, and that the Camanches and Black Feet would not be represented: the former have sent word that they "will be the white man's friendly enemy as long as they live." This company was joined upon the road by R. B. Riddle, of Springfield, Ill., Stephen Belen, of Beardstown, Ill., and James Williams of Autumwa, who came from California by way of Oregon City. They met 580 wagons and 3,000 head of loose stock. They report the emigrants as being generally well and in good spirits, but as having had some difficulties with the Snake Indians in which a Mr. Stewart was slightly, and a Mr. Hadley and Black were dangerously wounded.—[St. Joseph Gazette, 17th.

A New Dodge in Advertiisng.

There is a dry-goods jobber in New York city, who advertises this Fall in over 1750 papers. The manner in which it is done is this. He sends his advertisement to every paper he can hear of in the country, with an excepted order for five dollars to be paid in goods. These orders are taken by the publisher, and given to the country merchants, who bring them to the city and get the amount in goods. Of course the jobber does not let them off with a purchase of five dollars, but sells them five hundred if he can. It is a grand scheme, and one that will in the end make the man's fortune.—[Day Book.

The Emperor of Austria has published a proclamation declaring that Austria, is henceforth to be governed absolutely.

A Clincher.

Several individuals were discussing the merits of temperance and anti-temperance, in this city, not long since, among whom were two Irishmen. One of them was an unscrupulous advocate for the "liberty" to get drunk, and make himself and those around him miserable. The discussion was animated, and when the other Irishman got a chance, he said—"Now, frinds, I'll tell you a little story. Once the divil offered a gintleman a large sum of money, if he would commit one of three crimes, and might have his choice—to get drunk, commit adultery, or murder. An' faith he choose to get drunk, just what the divil wanted him to do, for after he got drunk, he committed the other crimes without the asking." This was a perfect clincher, and the discussion ended.—[Temperance Watchman.

At the Philadelphia Journeymen Printer's Celebration the following toast was given:—Hoe's Last Fast Press—the only six barrelled Revolver whose discharges spread enlightenment throughout the army of intellect.
